A Pan-American-Grace Air Line spokesman said there was no indication as to whether any of the eleven passengers or three crewmen had survived.

The destroyers, in canal transit at the time the report was received, hurried at flank speed toward the spot.

On board the plane were two Department of Commerce officials, a woman and two children and other United States citizens.

Washington, Aug. 3 (AP) — The Whiting, Stales War Department received a message from its Panama military establishment today asserting an army plane had located the missing Pan American-Grace Airways flying boat 20 miles northeast of Cristobal but had found no sign of life near it.

The brief radio message said merely the air liner which carried eleven passengers and a crew of three was located "totally under water with no sign of life."

Shortly afterwards, the navy said the aircraft tender Teller had been ordered to place where the stricken submerged.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiesen
Science Service Meteorologist

Weather beat the gardener. The days have been getting shorter since June 21, but in spite of this August sometimes averages the warmest month of the year. Later in North very early beets, kohlrabi, and radishes may be sown. Onions should be pulled as soon as the tops begin to ripen, and then aired by allowing them to lie on the ground for two or three days; further drying may be continued in a ventilated room. Tomatoes may be slow ripening; if so, place in straw in a cool cellar with plans in place. Continue the dusting or potatoes and other vegetables. Further south, peas planted this month will yield a good fall crop. Lettuce, Brussels sprouts, early turnips, sweet corn, string beans and winter radish may be sown. Later in the month set out cabbage plants.

Monarch Makes First Flight Since Accession to Throne

New Royal Monoplane Flies 115 Miles in 35 Minutes

KING VISITS CAMP

Southwold, Suffolk, Aug. 3 (CP)—The king flew here from Windsor today in the new Royal red-and-blue monoplane. It was his first flight since he came to the throne last December. The 115-mile flight was made in 35 minutes.

The plane was flown by Wing Commander G. E. Fielden, captain of the King's Flight.

Immediately after landing the king drove over the Royal lodge in Windsor Great Park where the king had been living since he left Buckingham Palace family before heading for the boys' camp here which the King organized when he was Duke of York. Some 400 boys chosen from factories and schools are given freedom of the camp by the son.

The king's plane landed on Martlesham Heath, about 20 miles from the camp, because it was too speedy to use any nearer landing field. His Majesty proceeded to the camp by automobile. He went barefoot, but wore his flying kit.

When Duke of York he visited the camp every year, joining in the games of the boys and spending a night under canvas. Although as sovereign it is impossible for him to remain over night, he plans to make another visit this year.

King Son Seemed.

The king's brother, the Duke of Kent and his inspection of the camp were an open-neck tennis shirt and grey shorts. He shook hands with Lord Wakefield and obliged the boys by jumping in the middle of the line to shake so they could take camera shots.

"You won't get a good picture standing that close," he warned them, "I'll be over there in a flash, away."

Later in a marquee he addressed the boys, hoping they were enjoying themselves. He took lunch under canvas among the boys, eating the ordinary fare after a bugle had sounded "Come to the cookhouse door, boys!"

After lunch His Majesty joined in games and later left for London by plane.

ROBERT J. JONES STRUCK BY CAR ON BRIDGE ROAD

Local Resident Died Before Being Admitted to Hospital

DRIVER NOT HELD

Alleged Man Stepped Into Path of Car After One Car Had Passed

Robert J. Jones 60, was instantly killed on the bay bridge road shortly after eight-thirty o'clock on Monday evening when he was knocked to the pavement by a car driven by Orley Parks, R.R. No. 4, Belleville. The man was picked up by a passing motorist and rushed to Belleville hospital but died before being admitted. He was then taken to the Martin-Hyndman funeral church already where an inquest was ordered by Dr. J. J. Robertson, Chief Coroner, which was convened today and after preliminary evidence was taken was adjourned until Friday next. No blame was attached to the driver of the car as an investigation has been completed by Sergeant Arthur Booth and Traffic Officer Gordon Ellis.

Car Working Web.

A complete examination of the car was made by the two officers and the vehicle was found to be in perfect mechanical condition and the brakes in 100% working order. The car was stopped in 21 feet at 20 miles an hour with the foot brake and 40 feet with the emergency brake. At the time of the accident Mr. Parks was accompanied by his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Reid. It is understood Mr. Jones was walking down on the west side of the bay bridge road about one half mile south of the railway tracks and was travelling in the same direction as the car who was driving, was proceeding in a southerly direction from the city and other car. The one car ahead had passed Mr. Jones but, it is stated by the driver of the second car, he stepped onto the highway directly into the path of the Parks car. He was thrown a considerable distance and sustained a compound fracture of the skull.

Mr. Parks quickly brought his car under control and rendered every possible assistance. The victim was picked up and rushed to hospital but died before he was admitted.

Sopwith Asks Day's Respite To Inspect Challenger After Being Beaten in Second Race

Will Have Boat Out on Ways For Going Over

BADLY BEATEN

Endeavour Wins Start on Monday But Early Out-footed

By A. D. MERRYL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Newport, R.I., Aug. 3 (CP)—T. O. M. Sopwith, British challenger for the America's Cup, took advantage of a day's prize today to groom his Endeavour II from stem to stern before pitting her against the United States defender Ranger, twice a winner in the current series, on Wednesday.

By tonight a new double-shipped plating job will be ready about the British sloop. With this self-imposed hope to match the double-shipped skin which Harold Vanderbilt has used to such great advantage in his Ranger.

And tomorrow the boats go out to the open sea to renew the 1826 match for the prized trophy. Ranger, having won the sea-going argument as between the challenger by decisive margins, needs only two victories to retain the cup in the best-of-seven series.

15 Minutes Ahead

Sailing over a 30-mile triangular course of 10 miles to each leg yesterday the Vanderbilt boat came home 15 minutes and 21 seconds ahead of Endeavour or approximately three miles in the run. Saturday the British sloop lost by 17 minutes, five seconds over a 30-mile windward-leeward course.

The tilt over the triangular course yesterday was the 1826 Rush Ranger as the faster boat in light weather on and off the wind. An hour to have crossed Ranger herself, or Vanderbilt's sailing skill, the fast cruising 12-metre defender overtook Endeavour II and by the time they were after being more than a quarter of a mile behind in the opening stages.

Ranger's time for the 30 miles, after making every mark a winning one, was three hours, 10 minutes, 33 seconds. Endeavour came home in four hours and five minutes.

This left the series reversed as they stage to the third of three legs, when Sopwith took the first race over Vanderbilt's Rainbow with his Endeavour I.

A Day's Respite

After receiving from the racing committee of the New York Yacht Club the formal notice of challenge in which to haul Endeavour II out and look over his boat, Sopwith viewed the start of the first heat. He had praise for the Ranger and declined to talk of his own.

"You know," he said last night, "there's just a possibility we may have picked up a lobster pot. We don't think we have the slightest damage, but Endeavour is simply too fast for us, but we shall have to go look things over and make sure.

"We should hate to go ahead with things as they are and then find out, later, that something really had gone wrong.

The British skipper said Endeavour actually did pick up a lobster pot during trials and towed it around several days before it was freed from the sloop's keel.

Praises Ranger

Of Ranger he said: "It is quite extraordinary the way that boat foots it. We had the right sails and they were pulling. We were sailing free enough. The crew made no mistakes. I believe they made one sailing mistake. But Vanderbilt has a great boat.

"We had the start by at least a minute and were in position, within a few boat lengths, and Ranger hasn't a bow comfortable. At this point we were sailing slightly faster than we possibly could, footed away. It was simply astounding."

The Ranger crew will have a haul out for general inspection during the lull before Wednesday.

John Gunning, Toronto, Admitted to Hospital Sunday

John Gunning 68 Linamore Crescent, Toronto, suffered a fractured spine and became a patient in Belleville General hospital on Sunday evening, when the car in which he was riding and driven by Thomas Bennett, Toronto, Street went out of control due to a blowout on the front tire on the Stirling road and turned over in the ditch. Jackson will be summoned for reckless driving and driving without the necessary permit, Traffic Officer Sam Irving stated after he had investigated the accident. Mrs Nora Walters, Ottawa, Steward Richardson, Belleville and Mrs and Ronald Warren, 191 Lingham street, Toronto, were also injured and all were examined at the Belleville hospital for possible fractures. According to the Traffic Officer, the car skidded some 372 feet after the blowout when round the curve near Chatterton and came to rest in the ditch. The car was wrecked.

William Pepper, 90 Chatham Street was badly shaken up on Saturday afternoon, when the motor which he was driving was toppled over on the highway, near Bleecker Avenue, when it was struck by a motor car driven by Edward McKerracher, Bethany, Ontario. The truck was proceeding in the direction of Toronto and the driver, Pepper, signalled with his hand he was going to make a left turn on to Bleecker Avenue. It is alleged the car following directly behind the driver by Mr. Kerrnsher struck the left side of the truck, turning it over on the east side of Bleecker avenue. RUSSIAN PAPER CHARGES JAPAN PROVOKING STRIFE

Consulate at Tientsin Wrecked During Bombardment

SYMPATHY FOR CHINA

Russian Press Voices Indignation Over Eastern Railway

Moscow, Aug. 3 (AP)—The newspaper Izvestia, official organ of the Soviet Government, today charged Japan was trying "to provoke a conflict with the U.S.S.R. by any means" in a denunciation of the wrecking of the Russian consulate at Tientsin.

The Soviet press blazed with indignation at Japan rejected "a determined" Russian protest against the raid on the Russian consulate during the fighting between Chinese and Japanese for possession of the city.

'Cowardly Action' Attacked.

Izvestia declared the attack on the consulate by White Russians opposed to the present Soviet regime was inspired by the "modest, complacency action of Japanese militarists" who have set out to find a pretext for the failure of frequent attempts to raid Soviet frontiers.

The Japanese press expressed sympathy for China in the conflict with Japan over the rich North China provinces of Hopeh and Chahar.

"It is not enough that the Japanese army is bombing Chinese cities, exterminating a peaceful population, encouraging the 'autonomy' said Pravda, organ of the Communist Party.

"Provoking" New Conflict.

"It is using every occasion to try to provoke new conflicts. The path of the Japanese troops is strewn with blood. Passing through the burned Chinese quarters they are now entering the city like hungry wolves searching for objects to attack."

The press also attacked the Japanese administration of the Chinese Eastern Railway and declared it is again withholding pensions due former Soviet employes of the line.

Payments of Pensions.

Soviet moves had failed to obtain payment of pensions for more than 1,500 Soviet citizens under the terms of the Soviet cession of the road to Manchoukuo, press dispatches declared. They asserted payments had been previously suspended in April, 1938, and January, 1937.

Battle Deadly Poison in Soil, Chemists Busy on Research

'Alkali Disease' Results in Blind Staggers in Horses

TOXIN IN PLANTS

Brookings, S.D., Aug. 3—(AP)—Chemists battled today against a deadly poison in an effort to make farming profitable on a wide area of western South Dakota land which bears selenium.

The element in the soil produces a disease known as "alkali disease" which results in blind staggers in horses and cattle and causes reformed, hairless pigs and distorted chickens. The animals absorb the toxin from plants which have taken it from the soil.

Farmers have abandoned many homesteads in the areas being studied by Alvin L. Moxon, chief chemist of the agricultural experiment station, South Dakota State College here, he explained.

Animals drop dead as soon as 24 hours after eating the poisoned food, he added.

Three pounds of the element in a million of fresh soil kill Mr. Moxon explained. It takes five parts of the next deadliest poison to do the same damage, he said.

Atwood, R.C.A.F., Trenton, following a motor accident six miles west of Belleville on Highway No. 2, shortly after 6.00 p.m. last evening. Provincial Constable Wm. McMeiken who investigated the accident alleged that the negligent operation of a motor vehicle driven by Atwood was subsequently responsible for the accident, in which five motor cars and a truck were involved.

According to eye witness Atwood was proceeding westerly following two other vehicles, when he attempted to pass the leading car in the line of oncoming traffic. Provincial Constable Alward in charge of the land rig forced a truck, driven by R. MacFarlane, Toronto, to stop suddenly, the application of the brakes on the heavier eastbound truck causing the latter to buckle turn over on its side and collide with a motor car, being driven westerly by Henry Mitchell of Trenton.

The truck was badly damaged and the contents strewn about the highway, while the top of Mr. Mitchell's car was torn off. Traffic was quite heavy at the time and one other automobile went into the ditch, but fortunately no person was injured during he entire pile-up.

Jimmy Macdonald, Boy Scout Honored by Village of Wellington

A lithe, slim youth, his skin burned to a deep brown, and with cheeks a vivid crimson received the plaudits of nine thousand people last night at the Arena in Wellington when Patrol Leader Alfred (Jimmy) Macdonald, born boy scout of Troop number One, received a splendid gold watch as a token of appreciation of his brave act a few weeks ago, when he rescued two small children from drowning in Lake Ontario.

Called to the platform by Reeve Arthur Goodmurphy, Macdonald blushing like a young girl stood uncomfortably, while Reeve Murphy introduced County Warden James Barber.

Reeve Murphy in a brief address stated that Wellington was proud to call Macdonald a native son of the village.

Warden Barber, in his address of presentation said that not only Wellington and Prince County of the tree of Macdonald but Prince Edward County joined in the same wishes.

Macdonald was then presented with the gold watch, the gift of his townspeople and upon which was engraved "To Jimmy Macdonald, For Saving Life."

His face slowly reddening for the second time the unassuming youth who did not hesitate to plunge into the waters of Lake Ontario, when his hand for the gift. The Arena rocked with the applause and cheers of the thousands, who had gathered there on the occasion of the Civic Holiday celebration.

Several members of the MacDonald Troop who rendered invaluable assistance during the rescue of Miss Daisy Upton also received valuable recognition from the residents of Wellington.

BERT SHEPHERD HOLDS TICKET

Wins Door Prize Given by Wellington Veterans at Celebration

While nine thousand people rocked the spacious building with vociferous applause, Bert Shepherd, twenty-six year old Wellington labourer, walked slowly to the gaily decorated platform and there received the keys to a brand new automobile, the handsome door prize offered by Post 180, Wellington Legion at the Civic Holiday Show staged in the Arena at the lakeside village last night.

While the element of chance no doubt had a lot to do with the appearance of the huge gathering, the performance staged by a number of international vaudeville stars failed to advance noticed and left nothing to be desired from an entertainment standpoint.

At an early hour the crowd slowly filled in the Arena. By eight o'clock it was packed to the rafters. Ex-service men, members of the sponsoring organization handled the crowds with military precision and despatch.

At eight-thirty, President Dr. Hugh Macdonald opened the show. Mr. Burd officially declared the show open and called the audience to stood reverently in silence for two minutes. The haunting notes of the last Post rang through the building, and the show was on.

A dancing routine by twenty girls delighted the crowd with a splash of colour and rhythm unanimously received. Keen interest was shown as the show slowly unfolding many valuable acts appealing well merited applause. Of particular interest was the functioning of a clown, who performed on a bicycle which obligingly broke down at intervals, thereby upsetting the rider, which stood out was a roller skating act, the performers giving a display of balance and dancing on nimble feet. Another act highly pleasing to male partner of the team invited people to the stage and whirled them around in a dizzy pirouetting on his toes. A dance band, whose rhythmic strains held the audience in the desired dispersed mirthful music all evening. Under the capable direction of the jolly master of ceremonies, comedians, acrobats, dancers and singers all appeared and performed in a program of variety that taught the fancy of the audience.

Interesting Draws

Interspersing the various acts were door prizes of five dollar bills, one of which was drawn and with fifteen minutes to the holders of stubs of identical drawn from a drum. Tense interest on the part of the audience preceded each draw, which was greeted with unbridled acceptance each result with prolonged applause.

The drawing for the major prize was left to the last, and the crowd began to fall over the audience. Slowly a grotesquely painted clown advanced to the centre of the stage and with a draw forth a ticket. Handing it to Legion official he stepped away. Amid silence the name of the fortunate winner was read out. A roar from the crowd loudly, when a resident of the village was given the Ford Coach.

A crowd numbering in the vicinity of three thousand enjoyed the performance staged in Memorial Park during the afternoon. In the heat of the day tempered by warm breezes, a fine program of miscellaneous vaudeville performance was staged. Headed by a funny clown band, the band leader staged on the green of the grass, while a crowd of happy children gathered about the funny musicians.

A bingo booth operated by members of the Legion did a land-office business, while many people availed themselves of the many attractive facilities. Many picnic parties were noted, while all day a steady stream of vehicular traffic wound its way through the streets of the village.

9 QUEBEC PLANTS NOW ON STRIKE

10,000 Workers Waiting For Move by Gov't. or Officials

Montreal, Aug. 3 (CP)—Pickets stood guard outside nine Quebec Province textile plants today while leaders in a strike of nearly 10,000 workers waited for the employers or the Quebec Government to make the next move.

Reaching into seven communities the walkout had crippled eight mills of Dominion Textile Company and one operated by a subsidiary. General operations were halted though skeleton staffs manned three of the factories.

Shading pat on yesterday's strike call that drew the men and women workers out, Alfred Cote, President of the National Catholic Federation of Textile Workers, said the Federation planned to sit back and await the next move, either from Dominion Textile or from the Government.

His union is demanding collective bargaining rights, shorter hours and standard wage rates. The prized issue were the first two, a union spokesman conceding the Federation would accept present pay if hours were cut from 55 to 48 a week.

Threshing General In Western Ontario

Toronto, Aug. 3—(CP)—Threshing of wheat was general throughout Western Ontario last week with average crop returns ranging from 30 to a high of 45 bushels an acre, the Ontario Department of Agriculture reported today. Some barley and early oats have been cut but threshing will not start until next week, the report said.

All fall wheat in Southern Ontario has been cut and a start made on early oats and the second alfalfa crop. About half of the wheat yielding from 15 to 35 bushels an acre. The district's harvesting was delayed by weather conditions and all hay is not in yet.

Farmers in Need of Experienced Help

Stilton, Ont., Aug. 3.—(CP) Any man physically fit and accustomed to working can get a farm job any day in the week if he is willing, J. E. Whitelock, Ontario Agricultural representative for Halton County said today.

"There is quite a shortage of suitable farm help, and as for experienced men—well, there just aren't any," said Mr. Whitelock.

"Toronto and me twenty men on relief last week but none of them had ever worked on a farm or knew the first thing about farm work. Some had been on relief for long periods and were soft. They couldn't stand hard work. Five of the twenty were out of the question entirely. I placed the nine-teen and half of these either left the job or been sent back by the farmers."

SKIPPER'S WIFE PRAISES RANGER

Mrs. Sopwith Says Defender Went Like a Train

(By Mary Elizabeth Plummer)

Newport, R.I., Aug. 3.—(AP)— Phyllis Sopwith, wife of the skipper of Endeavour II, said after the second defeat of the British sloop, "Endeavour did like a train."

"Nobody minds being beaten by better boat," said Mrs. Sopwith, who sails in each race as her husbands' timekeeper in the America's Cup series off Newport.

The series, she added quickly, is not over—"one always has hopes to the last breath."

In the lounge of their palatial yacht Philante, named for her and the Sopwith's five-year old son, Thomas Edward, she said of the race:

"We're not a bit unhappy about it. It would be a pretty poor sport who didn't say to the victor, 'jolly good luck to you'."

Bagpipes—the Sopwith's dinner music—skirled on Philante's bright-ly lit deck. There was gay laughter aboard, as Sopwith and his wife dined with their ten yacht guests.

Skipper Sopwith's wife is a tall, graceful woman with fair English coloring, gold-blonde hair and blue eyes. She was wearing a white satin dinner gown with light blue sleeves, a triple strand of pearls and satin sandals.

BOOTLEG COAL MINING ATTACKED

Long Series of Accidents Referred to by Attorney General

Harrisburg, Aug. 3.—(AP)—Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti today pointed to the Mahanoy bootleg mine cave-in as "another gruesome reason why this pathetic problem must be solved." One man was killed and two others were rescued yesterday in a mine cave-in.

"The history of bootleg coal mining in Pennsylvania is strewn with a long series of accidents of this nature which have claimed the lives of hundreds of men," Margiotti said.

He proposed creation of an anthracite authority with power to take over closed mine land and abandoned collieries in the event land owners or operators refused voluntarily to lease to private enterprise.

The Anthracite Institute estimates mines in bootleg mines, working make shift collieries remove more than 3,000,000 tons of coal a year and sell much of it in five eastern states. The Institute estimated this coal has a market value of $35,000,000.

FATE OF THREE

had sighted the missing plane.

"Fleet airbase plane sighted an engine section minus engine of missing plane about 265 degrees, 35 ....(Continued on Page Three) miles from Colon; area under light," the navy message said. "No personnel or additional wreckage sighted. Search being continued for possible survivors."

The Pan American-Grace ship took off yesterday from Guayaquil, Ecuador, for Balboa in the Canal Zone.

The Radio Message.

In its last radio message to Panama, it reported it was circling downward because of overcast skies.

The message sent to the chief of Army Signal Corps here by the signal officer of the Panama Canal Department said:

"Missing Pan American plane located 30 miles northeast of Cristobal. Totally under water. No sign of life."

War Department officials expressed an army plane participating in the search for the missing air liner had made the report.

Search Widespread.

Balboa, Canal Zone, Aug. 3 (AP) —Twenty-two United States Army planes fanned out over isthmus and coastline today in search of a missing Pan-American-Grace Airways flying boat with nine passengers and a crew of three.

Two squadrons from the navy air base at Coco Solo combed the area south of here for the plane, not heard from since it reported bad weather last night. The plane was flying from Guayaquil, Ecuador.

The U.S. Navy Department at Washington said a total of 65 planes —the navy aircraft tender Teal, the ship Nokomis and the destroyers Taylor and Biddell had been ordered into the search.

On the Atlantic side of the canal, officials said, 30 navy patrol planes, 3 navy amphibians and 14 army planes were ordered out; on the Pacific side two navy patrol planes, one navy amphibian and 25 army aircraft.)

A radio message then indicated the ship was nearing Cristobal, its destination on the Atlantic Ocean side of the canal, and was descending in search of an opening in a heavy cloud bank.

The Pan-American clipper, scheduled to take off early today for Miami, Fla., and with which the missing ship was to have made connections, cancelled its flight and joined the search.

If the Pan American-Grace airliner reported overdue at Cristobal on a flight from Guayaquil, Ecuador, made a safe landing along the Pacific coastline south of Panama its passengers need not suffer any real hardship.

Many Villages in Territory.

From Buaventura, Colombia, the last stop on the flight from Guayaquil to Cristobal, northward to the Panama side of the isthmus, the area is dotted with small Indian villages and friendly little harbors. Many of them have no means of communicating with the outside world.

The Sikorsky S-43 type plane used on the Guayaquil to Cristobal flight is one of the most comfortable in service. It carries emergency rations sufficient to feed the passengers for several days.

It is one of the latest type ships used by "Panagra" and is equipped to land on either land or water. There are, however, few, if any, landing fields available between Buenaventura and Cristobal and the pilot undoubtedly would try to make a landing on water instead of land if he had a choice.

WALKS 47,146 MILES

St. John's, Nfld. Aug. 3.—(CP Cable)—Jean de Vaudreuil, 70-year old Belgian war veteran walked into St. John's today, completing what he said was the 47,146th mile of a "hike" that has taken him around the world in the last 17 years. Vaudreuil walked 743 miles across Newfoundland on his latest jaunt.

ROME IS CORDIAL TO NEW GESTURE BY GREAT BRITAIN

Relaxation of Strain in Mediterranean is Foreseen

WESTERN PACT HOPE

Question of Ethiopia to Come Before League of Nations

By GEORGE HAMBLETON

London, Aug. 3 (CP)—A new phase opens in Anglo-Italian relations.

The purpose of the exchange of letters between Prime Minister Chamberlain and Premier Mussolini is to restore relations between the two countries to the cordial basis existing when the Mediterranean agreement was signed in January.

It was then hoped that the agreement, accepting the status quo in the Mediterranean, would iron out existing differences between London and Rome. For a time the darkened skies obscured the only fix in line. Difficulties arose over Spain. Relations deteriorated again.

Improvement in Europe.

British circles are obviously pleased to note Rome's cordial response to the British gesture. It is regarded as the augury of relaxed tension in the Mediterranean and general improvement in European relations.

A few days ago the British government circulated among the powers a memorandum on the proposed western pact, replacing the Locarno Treaty which Hitler wrecked by pieces when German soldiers goose-stepped into the Rhineland. The memorandum went no further than to outline the existing position in the negotiations. Chamberlain now plans to quicken the machinery for western pact. Reaction from Rome is favorable but the Italians want to be sure of recognition of their conquest of Ethiopia.

Ethiopia's Status.

Great Britain's position is that the question of Ethiopia lies with the League of Nations. Ethiopia, although the Emperor is in exile and the Italians are in control, is still a member of the League. It sent a delegation to the League Assembly a year ago. Now the Assembly will be called upon to decide whether in law Ethiopia has any legal existence. If the assembly decides against Ethiopia pressure will be brought to secure formal recognition of Italy's conquest.

AIR LINER PLANS OCEAN FLIGHTS

The Schwadenland, one of two ships equipped with plane catapults assigned to the route, will leave Bremenhaven in a few days for its maiden hop to New York. The second vessel, the Friesland, will be stationed at Horta in the Azores.

Two specially constructed planes, the Nordwind and the Nordmeer, are ready for the start. Test flying is expected to begin on Aug. 16.

GIRL IS SHOT IN SUICIDE PACT

Companion Then Turns Gun on Self And Dies Instantly

Silton, Man., Aug. 3—(CP)— Henry Boyachuk, 24, and Mary Pwsilowski, 20, are dead as a result of a murder-suiced pact, according to police who say Boyachuk shot the girl through the head and then turned the gun on himself.

The couple drove Sunday to the cemetery near Valley River, 180 miles northwest of Winnipeg, and parked their car. The man shot the girl as she sat in th ecar, then stepped to the grave and killed himself.

Miss Prasilowski's sister, Mrs. Jessie Lupchak, and her husband arrived at the scene shortly after the shooting, having found a note from the girl in their home. The note said:

"Henry and I are going to the Valley River graveyard and you will find us both there. I am going to die with a smile on my face.

"Mary."

Boyachuck left a note to a friend reading:

"I am leaving for good. Please say something nice at my funeral.... We both decided to do this...."

SLUGGED BY BANDITS

A head gut required 20 stitches. The robbers were driving a dirt black sedan, said Tong.

JAPANESE BOMB CHINESE FORCES

Infantry Will Dispute Advance of Central Gov't. Troops

Tientsin, Aug. 3—(AP)—Japanese warplanes bombed the vanguard of the advancing Chinese armies today at Tehchow on the border of Hopeh and Shantung provinces, 81 miles south of here.

A column of Japanese infantry, supported by artillery and tanks, was pressing southward by forced marches to dispute the advance of the Central Government troops into Hopeh province.

Japan claims she holds a special sphere of influence in the North China provinces and in a week of undeclared war has captured its two main cities—Tientsin and Peiping.

The Japanese troops were reported to have reached a point 15 miles south of Tientsin, fighting scattered engagements as they advanced. Japanese headquarters reported, however they had met no real resistance.

The advance brought the Japanese within a few miles of the eastern colonies of the 29th Chinese Army, being reorganized after defeats at Tientsin and along the line of the railroad in Peiping.

The Japanese movement to the south from the general headquarters at Tientsin was the materialization of their long expected thrust to gain a deep enough front to assure strategical and military control of Hopeh Province.

HEROIC RESCUE WORK REDUCES DEATH TOLL IN STEAMER FIRE

A view of the "City of Baltimore," the one-proud Chesapeake Bay steamer. Her superstructure completely burned away and her deck a mass of twisted railings, only the gaunt funnel of the ship remains standing. Only heroic work on the part of small bay craft prevented a holocaust comparable to that of the Morro Castle. Of the more than 100 passengers and crew, only two are dead.

The sand shovels that Annette, Marie, Yvonne, Cecile and Emilie have are perhaps just the things to make a big splash.

U. S. WAR MEMORIAL DEDICATED

The greatest war memorial of the United States in France to the Great War dead was dedicated in Lorraine on Monday, President Roosevelt speaking by radio from a yacht in the Potomac River to the Montfaucon battlefield in continued faith in the ideal of democracy. President Lebrun of France, General Pershing, and Marshal Petain pledged their nations to continuance of friendship and the quest of peace.

The fellowship of France and the United States dates from Revolutionary days and it has not been broken.

General Pershing indicated that the Meuse-Argonne campaign was fierce and heartbreaking. Here he pointed to the fact that it was the knowledge of such facts of war which made veterans hate war. "The last conflict brought no profit to anyone, but left many questions unsettled. But they cannot be settled by war."

These war memorials do not enshrine nor recall the bitterness of the strife but rather are tributes to the heroism of men performing an undesirable task. They are warnings to the nations that war does not settle questions—might is not the solution, rather it is the justice of the cause.

Under the heading "To those we left in France," the New York Times refers to the dedication at Montfaucon:

"How many eyes in the after-days of the World War (and some through tears) watched the maps of France to find the names of the places where their dead lay in the silent fields of white crosses once the scene of battle—theirs whose loss no gold stars or other memorials can requite! How many! In the Meuse-Argonne Cemetery alone 14,231 American dead were buried, and for every one of them there was at least one mourner and for some there were scores, hundreds, thousands, all finding new names in their geographies, or adding them if the maps were too small to give them room in the ordinary editings.

"How many have acquired a permanent title to their grave's length in the acreage of these fields! And how many thousands of N.Y. have learned to speak (in their own way) these once strange names (which it is difficult for some to frame to pronounce): Romagnesous-Montfaucon, Suresne, Belleau Wood, Contigny and scores of others whose soil has given hospitality to the men from overseas in khaki uniforms which became their shrouds.

"The American Battle Monuments Commission, under the chairmanship of General Pershing, has performed a most gracious national service in providing permanent memorials for both the dead and the living who alike offered their all: chapels, monuments, enduring bronzes. Together with the cemeteries they are our "cloud of witnesses" in France—our reminders of our lasting remembrance of those who perished there, giving them assurance of "praise that grows not old"—but witnesses, too, of our permanent possession of these (to us) most precious acres in France, where our dead lie. Like those of whom Housman wrote in his "Last Poems":

They braced their belts about them,
They crossed in ships the sea,
They sought and found six feet of ground,
And there they died for me.

SUNSPOTS VISIBLE

Scientists state that it is possible now to see two large sunspots with the unaided eye, protected of course by smoked glass or used photographic film. Special glasses are not necessary, even anything that was used to see the last eclipse may be used.

It was only last week that Hugh S. Rice, associate in astronomy at the American Museum of Natural History in New York, saw the largest sunspots he had ever seen in his life. He told Dr. Fisher of the Hayden Planetarium and that latter after investigating agreed that they were the largest he had seen.

The reason for the appearance of these is that the sunspot cycle of about 11 years is near its peak.

Dr. Fisher sketched the spots, the diameter of which he gave as 38,111 miles, almost five times the diameter of the earth.

Nothing is so contemptible as that affection of wisdom which some display by universal incredulity.—Goldsmith.

It will be very generally found that those who sneer habitually at human nature, and affect to despise it, are among its worst and least pleasant samples.—Charles Dickens.

However exquisitely human nature may have been described by writers, the true practical system to be learned only in the world.—Henry Fielding.

COMPANIONSHIP

'Tis not the servile pose, the bended knee
To one who dwells in some far-shining star,
But as a friend, we walk with Him today
As did the men of old in Galilee.

He drinks with us the sweet or bitter cup,
He lends to us encouragement and cheer
And if perchance we fall, He picks us up.
So we adore Him—never let us fear.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S "BIG STICK" was not heavy enough to force his proposed revision of the Supreme Court membership through the United States Senate. The President, not satisfied with Supreme Court decisions on his New Deal projects, proposed to retire elder judges and replace them with younger men, besides enlarging the membership of the court. Notwithstanding his large majority he faces a hostile group of his own fellowers in the Senate and Congress united with the Republicans who say hands off the Supreme Court. A number of five-four decisions of the Supreme Court led the President to believe that a larger membership would make for clearer decisions. However, political observers over there are of the opinion that since Roosevelt was so overwhelmingly returned at the last election the Supreme Court has been softening toward him as not just an accident, and as representing the opinion of a large majority of the citizens of the United States for the time being at least, and consequently decisions favorable to presidential projects have been more numerous. The mighty legal minds of the United States Supreme Court took some time to comprehend that the Republican party did not constitute all of the law and the prophets and security of the governing power in that land of New Deals and Mis-Deals, and they are apparently even beginning to think that the Democrats or Reform party may continue in power for some time yet—unless the nation goes into bankruptcy or becomes involved in some war for which the government of the day can be blamed by the proletariat.

BRIGHT LIGHTS OF CITY LIFE attract many girls from the farm, many of whom prefer a hall bed room and a walk in the park to the spacious comforts of the farm house and the wide open spaces free from smoke and monoxide gas and other noxious vapors. However, there's a drift the other way up at Fort Smith, North West Territories, who likes the quiet of home life best of all, and has returned from Edmonton where she saw the sights, glad to get back home again, despite the few inhabitants and scarcity of entertainments, outside of fishing, hunting and revelling in the great open spaces. Her first twenty-one years were spent on the frontier, went to school in the little settlement, and had her first holiday last year when she accompanied her father 1,300 miles farther north to Aklavik. Her father, Johnny Berens is pilot on the Hudson Bay steamer Distributor. Few new faces would she see outside of Indians and Eskimos. Two months in Edmonton did not remove the love of home implanted in Dorothy Berens. She went to dances, movies, and all the entertainments of the city. She met Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General aboard the steamer Athabasca and told him "I need it all right but I'm glad to be going home. It was not so much and I like it in the north." Asked if the city surprised her, she replied: "I'll say it did. I had never seen tall buildings or trains or street cars or movies before and I didn't have any idea what it would be like. Her greatest thrill was "the movies."

THE UNFORGIVABLE SIN OF MOST WRITERS is the habit of using twenty words to say what could be said in ten, or inflating a small idea into a ponderous article. So says Phillip B. McDonald, associate professor of history at New York University, referring to articles in newspapers and magazines. This might also apply to speeches and some sermons.

IMPERIALS PASS STRONG MOTION

Take Exception to Address Made by Pension Minister in House

Brantford, Ont., Aug. 3.—(CP)—All men in Canada who fought in the ranks of the Imperials were today petitioned to protest "slur on the Canadian British Army". By playing away from Veterans' funcigns in the local house C. G. Power, Pension Minister of Pensions and National Health, is expected to attend by his official capacity.

Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King was asked, in the same resolution passed by the gathering of Imperial Veterans at their closing session last yesterday, whether he approved statements attributed to Mr. Hazzard to Mr. Power and relating to Imperials now resident in Canada.

The words to which the Imperials here took umbrage were spoken in a parliamentary debate by Mr. Power was quoted as saying of a Canadian Imperial that that they fought for the United Kingdom: "They did not fight for this country. They have a constitution let them make it to the Imperial Government."

Lengthy Debate

Lengthy debate on this and other issues marked the final business session, while outside the warriors' hall, with a march-past before the City Hall, was featured by the appearance of a group of German war veterans carrying the Imperial German flag. Major Handley Gerry, a Toronto holder of the Victoria Cross took the salute.

Not as large as expected, but about 7,000 actually attended, holding business sessions, making whoopee on the streets and in their "tented city", Salisbury Camp, playing army to wish him, and formed up holding sing-songs and band concerts.

It was decided to hold over for one year formation of the Dominion-wide organization to be known as the Imperial Corps Association of Canada, head, Rev. Capt. Allan H. Perry of Owen Sound, who presided at the week's resolution and who acted as chairman, was named a liaison officer between provincial organizations to further a cementing of the individual units into one body.

Little Benny's Note Book

This afternoon ma sent me for a hall dozen lemons in a hurry. I got back with them about a hour later and ma was mad as kingdom come because of her having 3 different idea of a hurry, saying. Now look here, Benny, next time I go a errand and tell you to come rite back I'm not talking just to hear the melodious sound of my own voice. I wanted those lemons in a hurry ago and now they're no use to me, she said.

What do ma, why? They haven't changed any? I said, ans she said. No, but the time has, and now it's too late to make what I was going to make.

Then ma, what was you going to make? I said, and ma said, None of your business and I ought to give you a resounding smack for your disobedience.

Well sir, my smiles, ma, Ch wickers. Sam Cross was going a errand too, and he was supposed to be in just as much of a hurry as I was but he agreed to go with me if I agreed to go with him, and I agreed to go and we let him in on the agreement, so he came with each of us and we both went with him to the shoemakers. I said, and ma said, My lands if you'd had to go all those places you'd of had a perfect fit.

Old Hunt and he was going a fast as he was about to go with the agreement, so he came with me and we let him in on the agreement, so he came with each of us and we both went with him to the shoemakers. I said, and ma said, My lands if you'd had to go all those places you'd of had a perfect fit.

And Ch ma, that's not all, I said, and ma said, Well is all I care to hear.

The result being I didnt tell her about Glasses Magee getting in the agreement on his way to the Chinee laundry, making one more place to stop.

A Dialogue on Moderation

Mr. A: It's my opinion, sir, there's a big gap in principle between moderation and prohibition.

Mr. B: Yes, moderation means the avoiding of extremes, being temperate in conduct . . : that sort of thing.

Mr. A: It's a matter of character, a matter of control: Prohibition denies that people can exercise self control.

Mr. B: Yes, but every decent citizen is agreed that young people should be protected from the abuse of drink.

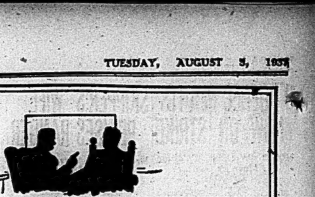
Mr. A: And yet, those same decent citizens listen to the shouting of extremists who want to return to prohibition.

Mr. B: What about those figures : : : arrests, convictions, accidents, etc.

Mr. A: Mostly misinterpretations of conditions. Half-truths. Examine the situation fully and you'll realize that even with their occasional abuses, the beverage rooms are the best safeguards against the evils we all want to destroy.

Mr. B: But aren't you arguing in circles?

Mr. A: Yes—in a circle that goes back to 1916. Remember how I warned you that prohibition was going to make drinking a sport, and drunkenness a distinction? Have you forgotten already how this actually happened?



Mr. B: Who's talking about prohibition? Ontario has one of the soundest liquor control systems in the world.

Mr. A: Agreed. But the agitators who are trying to create a public demand for restrictions are forgetting that fact. They forget, too, the degrading conditions that existed under so-called prohibition.

Mr. B: I must admit there's a great deal in what you say, and rather than go back to the bad old days, I'd rather see young and old in public government controlled premises . . : drinking a wholesome mildly stimulating beverage like beer.

Mr. A: Right you are, and so would every other thinking citizen.

SALUTE TO Love

The Rexall Drug Store Invites You

Mr. Grayson came in from the barn looking embarrassed yet pleased to be there. He attached himself to Caroline, so that she could not find him, one of a succession. Indeed there was nothing else for the poor man to do. Kate and Ashby she grew regarded him as a threesome old bore and wondered what he was going there.

"We were to use one of Mr. Grayson's boy's rowing suits to go in the lake," she explained vivaciously, and then hated herself for being so considerate of him. "This," she thought darkly, "is what I get for using him!"

Someone tried the radio but its worn speaker sputtered worse sounds than usual. Bar worse, because of the storm in the air.

Kate said in Caroline's ear, "Let's get just those whole stacks of cards and take tables. What?" "No!" Caroline whispered back. "Fools' paradise."

Paper and pencils were produced and guests were duly forgiven. It not even with Cynthia Chenault's help, could they put them across. Douglas, set on a two-day bout to break away and set up for themselves, bet them they couldn't make the score to go except the kitchen. And that they couldn't find room, even helped by two low-spirited colored people and a great deal of unaccountable smoke.

It was inevitable, Kate decided afterward, that Caroline's guests should have chosen that time to smoke. It was the kind of a night.

At 11 o'clock the cakes were cooked and the rolls buttered, were toasted amid a smoke screen from the kitchen, and the coffee percolated. Cooks choked . . . The cakes that were cut showed a texture frighteningly sticky, for the icing had never hardened. The coffee cream was fatally sour.

Just before midnight the Major came in, smiling, and was roundly greeted them all gallantly and rather pompously. Behind him came Johnnie Baird helped him upstairs to his room while a pitying, shocked silence descended on the living house. Kate's eye sought Morgan's in a despairing appeal. But he did not look at her. "Maybe he thinks Kate's responsible for me," she defended him to herself.

In a little while the girls went up the interminable stairs to the dressing room for their wraps. A helpless embarrassment was upon them as they took turns before the cracked mirror and hung over the dresser. No doubt they were remembering Kate's and Caroline's rooms at Med Meade and were appalled by the contrast.

When Kate told them goodbye at the front door her heart was like a stone. It did not matter to her that she had discovered Ashby to be quietly inviting a chosen few to dinner for the next afternoon, or that Morgan was at Eve's elbow, evidently the first of the evening. Nothing mattered. She only wanted them all to go and stop trying to be kind.

CHAPTER XVIII

Jeff Howard no longer went to town directly after breakfast. He cut through to the Mount Hebron road and when he passed Rickety House he sat there a moment to see if he left gray limestone dust in his wake. To do Kate justice, she was not trying to raise a dust. He was drawn to her house as a needle is drawn to a drug, and his speed was from nervousness.

During the week of Kate's convalescence he was restless and moody. He hesitated, wondering how she was, and had no way of finding out. Finally, passing the house, he found Major Meade at the mailbox in the act of extracting yesterday's paper.

Jeff stopped impulsively, his car skidding in the gravel. "Anything for Mead," he said. "How're you feeling?"

The Major recognized him and smiled politely, always anxious to show kind attention to the friends of no grudge against him. "Pretty good, Mr. Howard, pretty good. Not an old fellow. And how are you?"

"I stay healthy," Jeff told him. "And your family, Major?"

"Pretty good, pretty good," repeated the old man, unfolding the paper at the headlines to see what politics was up to now. "Considering a Republican young fellow," bent from a mountain county!"

"I think so. I always vote as I think best. It's right hot weather we're having. I look for rain by night."

"Rain? I hope not." The old man anxiously scanned the sky. "My granddaughters are havin' a swimming party this morning in Grayson's lake. They've been prepairin' for two days—a day—"

Jeff Howard felt vast relief that Kate Meade was well again, and he felt, too, a stinging resentment to know that she had been planning a party while he was fighting unreasonably over her injury. He felt bitterly hatred for the young men who would be on the bay waiting. He needed it on your rain and drench them. He hoped to Heaven it would.

"Good day to you," he said, and drove away.

Now that the Major's attention had been called to the weather, he began to be his tyrannical self. If there was rain coming, as sure as he lived! He consulted the newspaper. The weather man, too, anticipated it.

"Poor things!" he said passionately, meaning his granddaughters. He went to the garage, removed the loose stone from the foundation and extracted a pint bottle that was hidden there. He uncorked it and drank the nip which remained. His humiliation grew mellow and sad. "Poor things!" he said again. The certainty that her hay-ride was condemned to suffer lessened suddenly harder to bear than the loss of the money and the time. The Major went to the barn, hitched Dandy to the phaeton and drove quietly off to town. The sisters were glad to see him for hours.

Kate Meade learned known that his observation about the weather would come true, bringing with it humidity and rain for Kate's party. He called on her after she got home, and found her in bed with a book. She looked pale and had already reached a dangerous pitch mentally; a hatred for, and a passionate love of, the same creature.

The hay-ride brought Morgan Prentiss back to Kate, after all these years, as she had planned. He drove out the next evening about 8 o'clock. She was in a clean but shrunken white dimity that made her look like an over-grown child. He coming around her. Kate had made up her mind that Morgan should keep his light before that she would never see him again as a lover. That unbearable party, she knew, had annoyed him as something grotesque and dreary must always annoy a person who loves gaiety and success.

Morgan said, looking into her surprised eyes, "Go dress and we'll go for a ride. Maybe to Blue Grass Inn. Tell your family you'll be out late."

The transition from despair to happiness made Kate feel a little sick. She sent word through to Miss Caroline, understanding, served her as super lady's maid.

"Oh, Kate!" I knew you were wrong about everything being over. Where have you been?"

Kate answered, dashing the last hair from her forehead with her hands, "I hope so. Which hat?"

"Neither of those. You want something small and close to dance in. My white ribbon turban—"

"What Kate was ready to go, Caroline whispered. "Don't go in those clothes. I think I'll stay home until morning. He need'nt know you're sore.

"This spree of the Major's seemed the worst in years. Or perhaps it seemed that his absence made him no longer stand such abuse. He remained sullen, and he was by turns blustering and listless. They were glad that Johnnie Baird had him upstairs in his room while a pitying, shocked silence descended on the living house. Kate's eye sought Morgan's in a despairing appeal. But he did not look at her. "Maybe he thinks Kate's responsible for me," she defended him to herself.

Nail Care Regularly Is Advised

JANE WYMAN

Her nails are Always in Perfect Condition

x x

By HELEN FOLLETT

Finger nails should be without flaws. Do we hear groans from the home girls who furnish dust cloths and wipe up the kitchen floor? Even so, their claws must be in good condition.

Like the skin, finger nails are impaired by grime. The texture is changed, the lovely, transparent appearance vanishes, and the nails are clouded even after the most thorough scrubbing. Protect your hands with gloves—cotton ones when dishing; rubber ones when doing rough work or using water. If you don't protect them, your hands will soon look old.

Use a hand lotion freely all the year round. At least once a week give yourself a brisk massage with cuticle lanoline or cocoa butter. Treat the fingers with an up and down movement, do a rotary motion with the thumb over the back of the head. Work on the wrist bones. Friction this lubricant into the cuticle around the finger nails.

No woman can afford to indulge in the "blues." Emotional storms and headache spread such a pretty face is no time.

What is the remedy? Unpleasant emotions have a bad effect upon the functions of the body. They quicken the pulse, chill the skin and slow up the processes of digestion. Keep tranquil. Any physical machine goes on about its business pretty well.

Many wrinkles are acquired by sheer worrying. At the first sign of them, get out the massage cream, use it every night and iron the face with ice every morning.

CUTTING A DASH is easy with a smart cape. A nice model for early Autumn is in black broadcloth, trimmed with gold braid epaulettes and brass buttons. It is full and circular in cut.

AN ANGEL of a hat has a double halo with just one open strip of felt across the crown. The fabric is black felt.

A SMART DRESS for summer is in multicolored stripes on a white ground. The full gathered skirt, puff sleeves and front-buttoned, tied bodice are features of the peasant silhouette.

A CHANGE from the fabric or feather capelets seen at smar evening places is the capelet made of fur upon which are sparkling sequins. Nice lace. It may be worn with any color or type of dress.

PLENTY OF PLEATS figure in many of the midsummer models. An all-around pleated skirt is a feature of a red, white and gray poppy print crepe de Chine frock. Other features include a notched collar, a deep hip yoke piped in red, and soft puff sleeves. The collar has red piping.

A NEWCOMER to the color card for summer is a soft green-yellow that is nice with almost anything. For dressing up a dark dress we like a dash of this shade and bag of capeskin in this shade.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

NO WOMAN KEEPS LONG THE MAN SHE CAN HENPECK

In these days of emancipation of the once "gentler sex," when every other girl draws her own pay envelope, and one in very four is said to have her own car, a "mere man" writes to ask me what kind of men these independent girls really love, or if, indeed, they love at all.

Well, my dear sir, almost any man, except a "sissy", can qualify as the adored of our modern economic amazons. A man can break every one of the commandments and not be above administering a sock on the wife's jaw—and he wouldn't be as great an offence in her eyes as being a "sissy"!

Sometimes the clinging-vine men manage to get away with it when they marry masculine women—ladies who love to bone, finding in meek and timid males the perfect type of parlor football. But the average clever girl, no matter how many degrees she may have taken in college and how fat her pay envelope, dreams of being wooed by a cave-man.

That's why the cave-man movie always goes over big, with the best seats filled by ladies with bulging foreheads. These, after identifying themselves with the heroine, flung across the pommel of a saddle and made off with to the desert sands, leave the theatre in search of their hats—and dreams.

Of course, women will not admit this is true of the manipulated hero type of their own sex; but all you have to do is look at the men with whom they really fall in love. If their maternal instincts did get the better of them, and if, in a fit of aberration, they did happen to marry a bit of male fry, you'd see them glancing wishfully at the stress situations, or sneaking off surreptitiously to prize-fights.

Women, politically and socially conscious, who attend clubs and listen eagerly to questions of the day, almost invariably go home and talk things over with friend husband. It takes more than a unison degree and a salary to change human nature overnight. The ladies call this "getting the masculine side of the argument"—and often fall for it.

Spellbinders of their own sex, with visions of delivering the woman's vote for this or that candidate or cause, know only too well the dangers involved in having the ladies go home to talk things over. Statistics, justice, appeals to mercy and eloquence may have annoyed them to the point of becoming crusaders; but if they have a cave-man or even a near-caveman in the home who will give them a bit of political rough stuff, the human way of looking at it, their votes may match his.

Women yearn to have their husbands as counsellors and friends; unless, in a moment of weakness, they may have married one of the small "sissy" type. In that case it's likely they will do a little laying-down on the job when it comes to account, and have the little man role as they say.

Women want, more than anything else, to be proud of their husbands. They worship success, not because it insures bigger and better cars, and warmer furs, but because it shows they knew how to pick a winner. It is the outward and visible proof that the husband has measured up to standard.

GOOD MANNERS

CHANGE IN WEDDING PLANS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I became engaged before Christmas, and although I had no definite date made, I intended to be married in June. Unfortunately, my future husband's father died, and we postponed the wedding. We have now decided to be married next month. Due to the death in his family, and out of respect to them, I am asking your advice, especially both the ceremony and the reception.

1. Would it be improper or disrespectful for me to wear a veil and white satin gown as my future husband to wear a Tuxedo? I am of the Catholic faith and expect to be married at five o'clock on a Saturday afternoon in the church. Then we would be receiving friends to be married in a dress, no veil, a suit? If I do not wear a veil, should I not send invitations to our friends to come to the church?

2. Regarding the reception—would a dinner for his and my immediate families be the orthodox thing, or should I have just the bride party at a dinner? I realize that my future husband's family are in mourning, and I do not want to cause any of them to be offended, however, refuses to discuss the wedding and asks us to do as we please. Please help me with your suggestions.

B

1. Since the death of your fiance's father is so recent, you both should plan most carefully and exquisitely every detail of your wedding so that there can be absolutely no cause for unpleasant criticism. Your mother-in-law-to-be must be a very fine woman, a discriminating woman, to be willing to withdraw so completely from making plans or suggestions about your plans for your wedding. Let simple but artistic taste about this, you, in turn, should show as fine taste in your deference to her and her family. Your plans about being married in your church at five o'clock on Saturday afternoon is excellent. Nor is it improper if your heart is set on wearing formal bridal attire, that you should be slightly cast for so this, though it would be undoubtedly the better taste for you to wear informal attire, a street-length dress or suit.

What is important, however, whatever you wear, is for you to have the flanelle of mind to notify the members of the immediate The minute you begin to invite friends to the church, because a list of guests that will indeed not be the wish of your fiance's family. If you dress in bridal attire, and have only the immediate families present, there is no criticism. And I am sure that your fiance's family will not object to this, will not feel that there is in these plans any element of impropriety or disrespect.

2. I am a bit worried too by your reference to a "bridal party," in this question, he best taste is for you to have only one attendant, and for your fiance's to have a best man. There should be no bridesmaids, and no flower girls. Should be few guests, there need not be ushers, And an informal dinner for the members of your family and of his would be the proper thing for you to plan. A dinner in the home of a family brings in too much of the social quality, is appropriate under the circumstances.

FIRST LIGHT

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for a gentleman to light a lady's cigarette first, or should he light his own first?

Select With Care Pals Of Child

Provide Associations That Will Help to Develop Character

By LISA GRENELLE

If there's anything I really hate it's snobbishness. Why should anyone feel superior; or inferior, either, because of his or her station in life?

I have had friends in just about every walk of life, myself, and have found pleasure and comfort with each.

I have enjoyed my talks with taxi drivers as much as my conversation with Duke of Windsor, who, by the way, is one of the most young Prince of Wales, was natural, unaffected and charming. Only the affected and the pretenders are dull.

Nevertheless, though I believe in all adults mixing as much as possible, I believe in children associating, and enrich their own lives, if they can. It always works out so well with children.

A mature, well-balanced person can be benefitted only by associating with different social groups. Such character is already formed, his standards set. He will learn not to judge others, but at the same time he will prefer to mix with even established principles.

He has had enough experience and encounter with society not to be influenced blindly and unreasonably.

Children Different

But with a child it is different. A child is wholly impressionable, wholly indiscriminate. He reaches out and envelopes anything within reach. He copies everybody and everything.

Hence you have to do the selecting for him, show discrimination, and surround him with an atmosphere conducive to the fullest development, til the growth of those standards and principles that you consider important. And, in order to do that, you need all the support you can get from relatives and friends.

It is dangerous to confuse a child by throwing him into too many different backgrounds. There is no reason why your children should confine themselves to the companionship of your friends' children, or that the parents of their playmates should be rich or distinguished. But in order to establish standards, children in their formative years are better off, it seems to me, spending most of their time with children whose general background is similar to their own.

Not Snobbish

I know; I tried the opposite way myself for a time, with not always successful results. Oh, they were nice children; they probably will grow up to be fine, honest citizens. But their home ethics were very different from ours. They didn't, of course, know when to go home, and they understood no order unless it was shouted angrily and accompanied by a threat. It was not time at all before my own children were adopting the attitudes of their visitors. It was a costly experiment.

You cannot train your children to be sensitive to feelings of others, to be controlled without shouts and threats, to learn that parents are not enemies to be outwitted, but friends and allies, with whom it is better to co-operate, if you allow them to associate with children whose home training is entirely opposed to those principles.

Southern Golds

Underground development at the South Carolina property of Southern Golds, Ltd., is steadily improving, its ore picture, with recent interjections pointing to the advisability of a new enlarged campaign of work. Bruce Crabbe, mine superintendent, who is now in the city, discussed important developments of late with local officials and stated that should work continue to yield as satisfactory results it would be advisable to sink a new large shaft in the centre of the area, now known to be approximately 500 feet wide and some 2000 feet long on which four distinct vein systems have been established.

In conjunction with the current drill campaign from the underground workings, cross cuts are also being driven from the 125-foot level on vein number one. According to latest word from the mine this work continues to yield high grade ore comparable to that opened up in existing drifting operations.

The number 4 vein, which was recently cut at an approximate depth of 185 feet showing a true width of 30 feet yielded assays up to $74.00 on surface over good mineable widths, although details of the intersection at depth are not yet available, it is reported that sludge assays indicate that the entire ore will be developed over improved widths and values. A crosscut commercial ore will be obtained over the 125 level of the vein, further drilling is to be done on the vein to establish the length of the indicated ore shoot.

Largest Corn Crop Since Year 1929

Chicago, Aug. 3 (AP)—A corn crop valued at $1,750,000,000, the biggest money crop United States farmers have ever had, is in the offing depending in the corn belt, the August report of the Chicago grain experts indicated today.

Basing their estimates on reports from farmers throughout the producing area and on the latest official acreage figures, the private crop authorities here, most of whom have just returned from personal field inspection trips, forecast 1937 domestic corn production would total 2,721,000,000 bushels.

This would be the biggest. United States crop since the record breaking harvest in 1929 of 2,926,000,000 bushels. It would be more than 1,000,000,000 bushels larger than the crop of 1,534,317,000 harvested in 1936.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 3 (AP)—Weakness of rails and a downturn of trend in steel and motors offset rising tendencies of coppers, rubbers and specialties in today's stock market.

While favored issues were lifted fractions to around a point or more in the morning, top marks were not maintained, and losses of as much were plentiful near the final hour. Transfers were about 1,000,000 shares.

AAJMAA JUNIORS ENTER PLAYOFFS

Defeat Percival Stores 7-5 in Sudden Death Contest

Aajmaa juniors advanced to the coveted playoffs in the Belleville senior softball loop by virtue of a 7 to 5 victory over the Percival Stores in a sudden death play-off for fourth place in the league at Coleman Field yesterday afternoon.

The teams battled at even terms until the seventh when the Aajmaa kids unleashed a terrific offensive attack and before the dust of battle had settled four runs had crossed the plate. The Percivals took an early lead, when they scored a brace of runs in the initial inning, on the first four men to the bat hit safely in succession. Two hits in their first inning and three in the next resulted in the Aajmaas knotting the score in the second, as they scored one each in the respective frames. From that point the teams battled at even terms until the Aajmaa kids got the breaks, grabbing that gave them four runs in the fatal seventh inning.

The Percivals out-hit the winners 16 to 15, but the winners hit in the clutches, and when hits meant runs. Harold Jenkins was the big hound for the victorious Aajmaas and was given fine support by his mates in the pinches. Smith hurled for the Percivals, who boosted the ball for coming from behind to go down out four as the Aajmaa kids completed a fast clout and a hit to Manager Smith whiffed four. Riggs and Philp were the best offensive guns in the losers with four hits each while Howbotham and O'Neil collected a brace of hits apiece.

The winner of the game advances to the league semi-finals, meeting, offs, that commence at Coleman Flats this evening, when the Point Anne battle clash with the Belleville Sargents, while tomorrow night, in another league game, the Aajmaas battle the second placed Corbins.

The line-ups—

SYRACUSE CHIEFS WINT WIN BILL

Johnny Gee Allows Leafs But Two Hits in Night-cap

(By The Associated Press)

Syracuse Chiefs may not win the International Baseball League pennant but they appear to have a monopoly on the League's top hitting performances.

Lloyd (Whitey) Moore has contributed a no-hitter and a one-hit game to the League's 1937 record-setting total, and Johnny Gee turned in a couple of long hit performances.

Johnny Gee followed up by hurling a two-hit game yesterday to win 9-0 after the Chiefs had shaded Toronto Maple Leafs in the opener 6-5.

Right fielder Tom Oliver of the Leafs spoiled Moore's bid for a no-hit game, Oliver got two singles. The Chiefs pounded Bots Nekola, Joe Morton, and Mickey Meola, 12 hits including a homer by Al Glassop, who also collected two singles.

The first game was a thriller. The Leafs led 3-1 going into the ninth but the Chiefs rallied to score five times. Then the Leafs came back to score three runs and put the tying up the game. Shortly Hogan hit a homer for the Leafs in this game and also got a double to drive in three runs.

Jim Collins and Dick Porter led the Chiefs' attack with three hits apiece.

Jersey City Giants won their third straight by shading Rochester Red Wings 5-4 in the opening game of a five-game series. The Giants rallied in the third, bunching a pinch-double by Walker Cooper with another double and a single to take the lead.

Leo Mangum, lifted for a pinch-hitter in the seventh, was credited with the victory when Don Brennan blanked the Wings over the last two innings in a relief role.

ALL-STARS WIN OVER CORBINS 5-3

Four Run Splurge in Third Frame Helps Picked Team

Contrary to the general run of all-star benefit exhibition games the Corbin Looks did not win Civic Holiday's all-star softball game at Coleman Flats last evening, the "phople's choice", the All-Stars won but only after a tidy nine inning struggle and them by the score of 5-3. A four run splurge in the third inning gave the "All-Stars" their lead and resulted in victory.

The team chosen by the popular vote of the fans, used all three pitchers selected with Lorne Redman, Point Anne, starting, to be followed by Luffman, a teammate, and subsequently Schreider, of the Red Sargeoil. The Corbins used all of their three runs off the deliveries of Bateman and in the Red-Sargeoil. The Corbins used all of their three runs off the deliveries of Bateman and in the fifth Bateman, although both clubs collected eight hits each. The Corbins collected four hits and three runs off Bateman, two singles and a double off Luffman and a lone one base hit in the ninth, off Schreider. Reid clouted a homer in the initial frame to score Ebler ahead of him.

The three timely hits and Gaulin with a brace of hits were the best defensively for the "All-Stars". Singles by Gaulin, Klerr, Green, a double by Amo, Cole's infield fly and a hit by McGuire gave the "All-Stars" five hits and four runs in the third. Five pitchers in by Luffman and then Schreider saw the leaders cast in to victory. A goodly sum was realized for the league's fund for injured players for which the game was played. Johnnie Bawden hurled the entire game for the Corbins.

The line-ups: Corbin Looks—Henn, 3b; Ebler, 2b; Reid, lb; Bateman, p; Cook, ss; Ripley, rf; Harris cf; Hanna, lf; Tuttle, c. Philp, rf and R. Bawden. "All Stars"—Bateman, Luffman and Schreider, p; Gaulin, 1b; Klerr, cf; Green, c; Amo, lf; Whitehead, 3b; Cole, 3b; McMartin, cf and McGuire, ss.

TRACK RECORD AT NAPANEE BROKEN BY TRAMP ABBE

In one of the best race cards ever presented at Napanee on Civic Holiday, L. G. Bennett, veteran horseman of Port Hope had the honor of seeing two of his charges head the summary, while his royal stallion, Tramp Abbe broke the track record, that has stood for sixteen years. Tramp Abbe, expertly handled by "Sled" Craig of Kingston trumped the second mile in 2.06 flat with Victor Patch a very close second. Considering the track is 45 feet over the mile being recently measured by a civil engineer, the mile is quite remarkable. The roan horse seemed to be within himself all the time and probably could have shaved another second of that time. Answering Orattan, a recently purchased stallion by Mr. Bennett at Stratford a few days ago made good at the first asking, when he won the 2.27 class after dropping the first heat to Harry Grattan of Brockville. Tramp Abbe also won the Fred Evans to a win in the 2.21 class but was beaten the last heat by Dr. Hopkins' mare, Miss Jacob. There were all fast and the track was in excellent condition. KIWANIS JRS. TO MEET FOXBORO

Playoff Dates Arranged in Hastings Ball Loop

Cannifton, Aug. 3 (Special)—The semi-finals in the B.H. League will get under way on Wednesday afternoon with Foxboro being the guests of the Kiwanis Juniors at the Exhibition Park in Belleville. This was the decision arrived at by the League executive at a meeting held here last night.

Secretary Treasurer Art Hall read the minutes of the last meeting held on June 15th which were adopted. Following this, the final standing of the clubs was given out which showed Cannifton as the leading team with Shannonville ending up in the cellar position. The final standing:

	W.	L.	T.	Pts.
Cannifton	11	2	0	22
Foxboro	10	3	0	20
Latta	6	8	1	13
Rivards Jrs.	5	7	1	9
Shannonville	1	10	2	3

Rose Upheld

A bit of controversy was entered into concerning the postponed games, of which Shannonville have three. According to the rules all postponed games positively had to be played by July 31st, but owing to the inclement weather and postponements on all evidence than was expected and Shannonville considered it fair to ask for permission be given to play these games off, thereby giving them a chance to get into the playoffs. This objection was overruled and the above mentioned rule was upheld, so the first four clubs will enter the playdowns.

Belleville Meets Foxboro

Belleville Juniors were given a half-holiday date as Foxboro will play the Juniors in Belleville on Wednesday afternoon with the league game in Foxboro on Friday. If a third game is necessary the following Monday was chosen and will also be played in Foxboro. Cannifton and Latta will fight it out for first position, the first game in Cannifton, Thursday, Aug. 5th at 4.30 p.m. with return game at Latta, Saturday, Aug. 7th. Any possible third game, Tuesday, Aug. 10th. The winners of these two series will play a home and home series for the right to hold the Timmons trophy which is emblematic of baseball supremacy in the B. H. League.

Each club in the play-offs submitted one name as their choice of umpires for the play-downs, two neutral umps working in each series. In an improvement over the system used in other years, that of choosing two umps for the entire play-downs.

Since the League's inception back in 1932, when it was called the Cannifton, Foxboro, Melrose, Shannonville Rural League, the fine silver trophy donated by Mr. E. Timmon, ex-M.P., has been won by the Foxboro Juniors four times, in '33, '34 and '36. Latta took it away in 1935, and the latter Foxboro retake it again in 1936. Cannifton has always been in the running but have been knocked out in the semi-finals every year but the first when, they and Foxboro fought it out. This year the League extended its activity and organized the Kiwanis Juniors of Belleville. While the Melrose entrant dropped out and Cannifton made a walk-away of the schedule, they were closely trailed by Foxboro at the finish, and with Latta and Kiwanis Juniors playing an improved brand of ball almost anything could happen in the ensuing series but from the surface it looks like Cannifton and Foxboro will be the teams in there at the finish.

FARR ORDERED TO WEAR GEAR

Cannot Box Without Head Piece And Mouthpiece Until Bout

Long Branch, N.J., Aug. 3 (CP)—Tommy Farr, British heavyweight for Joe Louis' world heavyweight boxing crown, today was ordered his training today pledged to wear head gear and mouthpiece for the first time now until he keeps his Aug. 26 date with the world's champion.

Promoter Michael Strauss (uncle Mike) Jacobs who put up the $60,000 he posted for Farr to come here for the bout and the equal amount he has to have when he's promoting the show, was responsible for this directive.

Farr has disdained headgear except in two or three sparring sessions when he tangled with his spar-mates. After these brushes he told newspapermen that he would prefer no such mouthpiece and he could not look after my boxing."

But uncle Mike wants all of Farr in the ring when the Welshman meets Louis at Yankee stadium and yesterday he handed down his headgear edict.

Pontoon Lakes, N.J., Aug 3 (CP)—Joe Louis weighed 202 pounds on the scales of his Pompton Lakes training camp today and appeared set to be rapidly rounding into form for his title go against Tommy Farr, British challenger, Aug. 26.

Bing Crosby Has Successful Season With Del Mar Track

Del Mar, Cal., Aug. 3.— (AP)—A freshman promoter, no longer Bing Crosby tucked his first-turf season away with a plump profit today and prepared for bigger and better things at Del Mar race track.

Whether Bing Crosby the promoter eventually will show more profit than Bing Crosby the "crooner", remained an unanswered question but evidence from the 22-day inaugural meeting gave an indication in that direction.

In spite of dire warnings he would lose his shirt in the sand, track business the pari-mutels records showed a $177,946 "take" for the brief meeting, not to mention considerable profit from concessions.

The handle for the netting was $2,224,320, for a daily average of $101,105.66.

BERT CROTHALL TO MEET GARNER

Amateur Wrestlers to Put on Smart Card on Wednesday

Tomorrow night's show will be featured by the appearance of Wilbert (Bert) Crothall and Red Garner, who made such a decided hit on the last show here. This will be the first meeting of this pair of boys and the bout is sure to provide plenty of excitement. Crothall is quite certain that he can show his fans he can throw the "redhead" from Toronto. The semi-final will have Peter Pernokis locking holds with Eddie Gazley, another local lad, who made such a good showing against Bert Crothall on the last card. Gazely who entered the ring against Crothall on a moment's notice and without any training is going to be in better shape for his coming bout against the clever Greek boy. The preliminary will have another local boy in Jack Thomas who meets an opponent in Jim Timoski of Poland.

Guilty Conscience

By FRANCIS PAUL PYNE
Chief Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

Shifty Rogers (he of the "itching fingers") strolled carelessly into the small eating of peals he held in the hollow of his hand. His small, quickly eyes lit up with a certain fanatical glee. He held the pearls away to make a final examination as his experienced eye missed not a single detail. The pearls were flawless.

"Stanislas!" he exclaimed. "I'll cash in on these plenty. That fat old dame will certainly let out one awful squawk when she finds they're gone. I'll bet. They're worth a fortune. I'll better break before the police bulletin" or the whole hotel will be on my head."

With the facets in mind Shifty acted quickly. He reached inside his vest pocket, and took out a small black case from which he extracted a pencil and some black thread. Then he bent low and straightened the small string, placing it carefully on the left trouser cuff. He then performed a deft operation with needle and thread. Shaking his trouser cuff vigorously, with an amused smile played about his thin lips, he picked up a grip from a chair near the door and left quickly.

Down in the lobby he turned in his key to the desk clerk, paid his bill and then seated himself in a comfortable chair and soon had to-tum right out. Somebody might remember a thing like that later when the theft would be discovered. He'd wait ten or fifteen minutes and then slowly take his departure unnoticed.

To pass the time away Shifty let his gaze wander over the lobby until it rested on a woman opposite him. She was fashionably dressed and attractive but what interested him most was a diamond studded platinum bracelet she wore on her left wrist. Too bad, he thought, that his accumulation necessitated his leaving so quickly. He would have been mighty careful to add that bracelet to his collection.

He had been occupied in this fashion for about five minutes when he was conscious that some one was watching him. Glancing guardedly around the lobby he saw the cause of his uneasiness. It was Tom Deegan, a house detective, at the far end of the lobby, standing behind some palms. Deegan's steely grey eyes seemed to bore clean through Shifty when at last Shifty dared to let his lips nervously. Could it be that the old dame has discovered her loss already? Any way Deegan was to him.

But the sight of Deegan determined Shifty's next move and in a moment he was on his way to the street. Once outside he walked in a leisurely fashion northward, and after two or three blocks glanced surreptitiously over his shoulder to see if he was being followed. Convinced that he wasn't, he hailed a taxi, gave the driver instructions and settling back comfortably in his seat lit a cigarette.

Fifteen minutes later the cab pulled up before a somewhat ramshackle tenement and Shifty alighted, paid the fare, and then after a careful glance up and down the street ran up the steps, two at a time.

On the third floor, in the rear, he stopped and let himself into a small, pitch-black room. Once inside he lit a match, found a lamp and drawing a chair close to the table within its feeble ray. Next he put his feet on the chair and leaned over his prize. For he was about to extract the necklace from its hiding place in the shredded lining of the left side of his coat. Suddenly he realized that in his haste he had neglected to look it. He turned around in a flash and reached for his coat, but he was too late. Framed in the doorway stood Tom Deegan with the hotel detective's revolver in his hand.

Deegan knew Shifty's reputation well and wasn't taking any chances.

"Surprised, Stricker?" Deegan asked. "I would have nabbed you in the lobby but I didn't want anything against making a scene on hotel property. Come on, you have the right kind. And, say, no funny work. It isn't worth getting mussed up over, only the hotel is particular about these things. You know, we've had our eye on you ever since first visit to the place. But this time we've got the goods on you."

Realizing that he was in a tight spot, Shifty reached down and brought up the necklace, handing it to the detective. Deegan's eyes were as big as saucers. He reached out and grabbed it.

"I thought she'd soon put up a squawk," Shifty said. "But tell me, how did you get on to me? Was it me who pulled the job?"

"Good lawyers, man," Deegan gasped. "When you tried so hard to give me the slip, I figured there was some reason, but I didn't know you had pulled a trick like this. What I was looking for was the "linen set and those six towels you took from your room."

"Linen set! Six towels! But I . . . That is . . . Oh, Shifty cries died and his eyes were glassy. He was speechless.

Back at the hotel Deegan rushed across the lobby till he came to the desk. Mr. Matthews, the hotel manager, was talking to the clerk.

"Mr. Matthews," Deegan spluttered, "I—"

Mr. Matthews held up his hand. Deegan stopped speaking.

"Yes, I know what you're going to say, Deegan," Matthews said. "It was the maid's fault. The linen was missing from 642. Rogers, you know, had room 641."

Deegan just grinned.

SAYS BASEBALL IS UN-ENGLISH

Bishop Claims it is "Unsuited to English Temperament"

Liverpool, July 31 (AP)—Rt. Rev. Albert David, Bishop of Liverpool, doesn't like professional baseball and if he had his way England would have none of it.

Specifically he dislikes the "back-slap chat and calls" between players and spectators.

Writing in the Diocesan Review, the Anglican Churchman warned that baseball is "unsuited to the English temperament" and lends itself more readily to gambling than does cricket. He added:

"In professional baseball the crowds play a vocal part to an extent unknown in any of our English games. The backchat and calls of both players and spectators at a baseball match in America are something to be remembered when the play is forgotten.

"So far English spectators of base ball have only learned the elementary calls of the game. If they ever learn the full phraseology of American baseball we do not think it will be long before its undesirable effects are seen at association football matches."

AT THE BELLS

The Marx Brothers Present

A Field Day of Laughs

A horse doctor pretending to be a specialist in "double" blood pressure, a jockey who spurs his horse to win by throwing the race, a picture of a man the horse doesn't like, and a "wonder" of incredibly bad racing tips will have you bent double in laughter when you see "A Day at the Races", now in its third record breaking day at the Bells Theatre with the three Marx Bros. portraying the funniest roles of their entire careers in a picture which is an uproarious riot from beginning to end.

Groucho Marx plays the horse doctor, Harpo the jockey, and Chico the vendor of bad tips. Assisting them in some of the most amusing situations ever conceived for a motion picture are Maureen O'Sullivan, the talented singing juvenile, Allan Jones, the stately Margaret Dumont whose dignity is constantly being prided by one or all three Marxes, Esther Muir, who undergoes terrific "punishment" from the comedians, Leonard Ceeley, Douglas Dumbrill and others. The hand picked cast could not have been improved upon.

Even the maddest of the Marxian antics usually have a straight forward plot to fall back on, and "A Day at the Races" is no exception. In this case the complications ensue when creditors attempt to take over a sanitarium owned by Maureen O'Sullivan. Groucho, Harpo and Chico come to her rescue, and their attempts to run the sanitarium and, in conclusion, to raise enough cash to pay off the mortgage by winning a horse race, provide the groundwork for madcap action, and dialogue which keeps the onlooker in a state of near-hysteria.

The scene in which the lunatical Marxes paste Esther Muir to the wall behind a barrage of wall paper, the screamingly funny medical examination in which Groucho attempts to enlist in Margaret Dumont why she should swallow a ball the size of a hen's egg, the episode in which Groucho tries every expedient to hide the fact that he is a veterinarian.... these and countless others stand out as incidents actually too funny to describe. They must be seen to be appreciated.

But there is more than mere humor in "A Day at the Races." There is the attractive singing of Allan Jones in such hit numbers as "Tomorrow Is Another Day", "On Blue Venetian Waters" and "A Message From the Man in the Moon." There is a novelty song by Groucho, and Chico plays the piano while Harpo attunes his famous harp. A highlight, also, is a spectacular water carnival episode introducing a lovely ballet.

The picture, said to have been more than a year in the making, from every effort of painstaking care in making it a gala entertainment holiday fare of mad absurdities. The Latest World Events as revealed by the Paramount News and an exceptionally funny cartoon "Wayward Pups" concludes a splendid program of screen entertainment that will be repeated again tonight and Wednesday, matinee and evening.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Legion of Terror" and "Clarence"

Daring in its expose of the racket behind hooded organizations that are infesting sections of America and thrilling in its dramatic revelations, Columbia's "Legion of Terror", featuring Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill and Crawford Weaver comes to the Capitol Wednesday as amaz, hit No. 1.

The picture, literally torn from the front pages, is packed with suspense, starting as it does the operations of this social octopus as it spreads out to ensnare an entire industrial town. Reaching on exciting climax with a murderous night ride of the legion, the powerful drama will arouse the audience to a high pitch of emotion.

The story concerns two United States postal inspectors, played by Bruce Cabot and Crawford Weaver, assigned to trace the source of a time bomb sent through the mails to a U.S. Senator. The trail leads to an industrial city and the revelation of a hooded legion that is all powerful in its social and industrial life. The inspectors meet a girl, played by Marguerite Churchill, whose brother is waging a single handed fight against the hooded mob. Rather than reveal their identity, the governmen, agents appear to take opposite sides to the brothers and thus win the confidence of the brotherhood members and gain admittance as members.

"Legion of Terror" concludes on a gripping note that lets you know you've seen a real motion picture. Bruce Cabot and Marguerite Churchill continue to be two of the screen's better young players. They enact difficult roles with much finesse.

"Clarence"

There's an old saying about home being the abode of love. But there can be such a thing as too much love—and "Clarence", the hilarious comedy of family life by Booth Tarkington shown as his No. 2 at the Capitol on Wednesday, proves it.

Surplus of Love

Almost everybody in the Wheeler family, whose concerns are chronicled in "Clarence" is in love—with the wrong person—and as a result Eugene Pallette, the father of the madcap family, is lonely going nuts.

His daughter, lovely Eleanore Whitney, is in love with a fat, bewildered fortune hunter (Richard Carlson) Dorothea Kent is in love with Mr. sister's companion, Charlotte Wynters, who is old enough to be well, his big sister.

The brother is in love with the maid, but he thinks Johnny is also in love with her, and Spring Byington, Pallette's wife, is convinced that her husband is in love with Miss Wynters.

Into this scene comes Roscoe Karns as "Clarence" and everybody falls in love with him! And he falls in love, too, in a way which works out the scrambled affairs of all concerned to everybody's satisfaction and keeps Pallette from going to the bug house.

"Clarence" is an irresponsible and entertaining comedy which every member of any family will enjoy. Its William cast performs splendidly, and it moves at a satisfying pace replete with chuckles, snickers and howls of laughter.

WOMEN WHO HOLD THEIR MEN NEVER LET THEM KNOW

No matter how much your husband loves you and your nerves are strong, you cannot become irritable, sick, nervous and despondent when you are bad to live with one week in every month.

You often do lose housework because it's wrecked by the nagging backache of a three-quarter wife. The wife woman never lets her husband know by outward sign that she is a victim of periodic pain.

For these periods many women have told another how to go "multi-through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three weeks of life. Taken regularly it's a godsend to womankind. 2. Pre-pared to relieve pain. Also a wonderful tonic. Made again.

MANY REFUSE TO GO TO WORK

Men in Saint John Claim Work Plan Not Feasible

Saint John, N.B., Aug. 3 (CP)—Policy of work instead of direct relief for unemployed men became effective in Saint John today but most former relief recipients refused to work, claiming the new plan would make it impossible for their families to exist.

Under the arrangement the men would earn from $2.30 to $6.60 a week, according to size of families. This represents the same amount previously granted in the form of relief tickets without work. The men ask 35 cents an hour and enough work per week at this rate to make higher wages than the amounts now at.

Although some 100 men due to start work on relief projects today only 10 agreed to this. A large group of unemployed watched six workmen at Rockwood Park but there was no sign of disorder.

BANDITS SEEK ALL DOCUMENTS

Masked Men Raneack Home of Sir Dawson Bates

Belfast, Northern Ireland, Aug. 3 (AP)—Three masked bandits today broke into the home of Sir Dawson Bates, Minister of Home Affairs, beat his servants with revolver butts, ransacking his desk and files, and escaped.

The raiders were believed to have been Irish republican terrorists seeking police documents concerning the terrorists which broke out on the Free State border when the King and Queen visited northern Ireland last week.

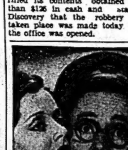
Valuables were not touched. Sir Dawson was not at home at the time.

Respiratory Infection Effects Emilie Dionne One of Quintuplets

Callander, Ont., Aug. 3 (CP)—A respiratory infection from some source outside the Dafoe Hospital has affected Emilie Dionne, one of the quintuplets, Dr. Allan Dafoe, physician to the quints, and Dr. Alan Brown, chief physician at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, announced after a consultation today. Dr. Brown was summoned to Callander for a conference with Dr. Dafoe today. Dr. Dafoe announced last night that Emilie was not well.

"I called Dr. Brown, who has been medical consultant to the children ever since they were born," Dr. Dafoe said. "Although the infection did not seem particularly serious, I thought it best that we should investigate carefully and if possible, trace it to its source."

After the conference Dr. Brown issued the following statement: "I have examined Emilie and was able to confirm Dr. Dafoe's diagnosis of a mild upper respiratory infection from which she should recover in a few days.



"The staff of the hospital was examined and there was no clinical evidence of any of them harboring an infection. It is thus evident that the infection must have been obtained from outside sources.

For the protection of her four sisters, Emilie has been isolated in a separate part of the hospital and has a nurse who attends to her alone. The other sisters were not in the play yard as usual today because of rain.

Dr. Dafoe and Dr. Brown said they made a careful examination of all household members and the other children to determine the source of the infection. In every case tests were negative and they believed the germs must have been taken to the hostal by someone visiting the quintuplets.

ORACKSMEN GET $13S

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 3—(CP)—Crackamen who blew the door off the safe in the office of the Wiltsie Packing Co., here last night and rifled its contents obtained less than $12S in cash and stamps. Discovery that the robbery had taken place was made today when the office was opened.

PLANE PLUNGES INTO BAY; PILOT DROWNS

Flying Officer Henning Carried to Bay Bottom; Corporal Collins Saved

Flying Speed Lost When Motor Stalls is Claimed

BODY RECOVERED

Companion Extricates Self And Swims to Shore

When the Violette machine he was flying plunged into eight feet of water in the Bay of Quinte in front of the Royal Canadian Air Force station near Trenton this morning, Flying Officer J. L. Henning, 30, of Waskada, Man., was drowned, while a flying companion, Corporal Collins of Station street, Belleville, managed to extricate himself from the submerged plane and swim one hundred yards to safety.

Henning and Collins were flying in an easterly direction with a tail-wind when the motor stalled. In an effort to bring the ship into the wind in order to effect a landing, flying speed was lost and the aircraft plummeted into the water between Baker's Island and the Airport, where it buried its nose in the muddy bottom.

Grappled For Body

Members of the R.C.A.F. dashed to the scene in the official cruiser and grappled unsuccessfully for the machine. This method unavailing eight men divested themselves of their clothing and plunged to the bottom in an unsuccessful attempt to extricate the body of the officer from the cockpit of the machine. Finally a rope was attached to the submerged plane and it was towed to shore. Efforts were found necessary to cut the wires of the machine before the body of Flying Officer Henning could be extricated.

Corporal Collins who managed to get out of the machine and swim to shore one hundred yards away was attended by Dr. Stevens, Medical Officer of the R.C.A.F., and rushed to Belleville General Hospital suffering from shock and slight injuries.

Here Two Months

Artificial respiration was used on Flying Officer Henning but proved unsuccessful. The body of the dead officer was taken to Trenton, where Coroner Dr. W. R. Ponton, K.C., ordered an inquest and autopsy.

Henning's mother, Mrs. Vera L. Henning, resides at 684 Jessie Ave., Winnipeg. Henning had been at the Trenton base for two months coming there from Camp Borden.

RANGER HOLDING 3-4 MILE LEAD AT OUTER MARK

Vanderbilt's Yacht Creates New Record in Sailing For 15 Miles

HEADING HOME

Endeavour Late in Breaking Out Spinnaker After Rounding Buoy

By HAMILTON MORGAN

Aboard Coast Guard Cutter Argo, off Newport, R.I., Aug. 4 (AP)—Apparently headed for their third straight triumph in defence of the America's Cup, Harold S. Vanderbilt brought his white-hulled, snub-nosed sloop Ranger around the outer mark at 2:42:07 p.m. Eastern time today, with a three-quarter mile lead over the British challenger, T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour II, at the halfway point in their 30-mile race over a windward-leeward course.

Record Run.

Ranger, negotiating the distance in two hours three minutes, 47 seconds, set a new record for a 15-mile windward leg. She was 33 seconds better than that established by Rainbow also skippered by Vanderbilt, in the first race of her 1934 series against Sopwith's Endeavour I.

Endeavour II rounded the mark set about eight miles southeast of Block Island, at 2:47:39, four minutes 12 seconds behind the American defender.

Both Broke Spinnakers.

Both broke out spinnakers for the 15-mile run home before the breeze and both were dilatory in setting them. Ranger's sheet parted to be stuck in the slops while Endeavour's was late in being sent up. When it finally was broken out it set badly, whereas Ranger's drew full and well.

Endeavour set her spinnaker, of the perforated "Annie Oakley" type, to the starboard, which should mean no advantage to either, providing the breeze, which recently had freshened to about 14-mile velocity, held fair.

AUTUMN ELECTION FOR THIS PROVINCE IS LATEST GUESS

Expectation is That Cabinet Will Set Date This Afternoon

OCTOBER 5 DATE?

Premier Hepburn Has Refused to Discuss Question

Toronto, Aug. 4 (CP)—Belief grew today that Premier Mitchell Hepburn would announce the date of an autumn general election following a session of his Ontario cabinet this afternoon.

The premier was expected to reach his Queen's Park office before midafternoon and immediately go into conference with members of the cabinet awaiting his arrival. All political circles confidently awaited the announcement of the date within a few hours. Most persons, both general and Conservative circles were October 5.

Elected in 1934.

The Hepburn Liberal government was elected to power in the general election of June 19, 1934, winning 66 of the 90 seats in the legislature. Conservatives won 17, Liberal-Progressives 4, Co-operative Commonwealth Federation 1, Independent 1 and United Farmers of Ontario, 1.

Present standing in the House is Liberal 64, Conservatives 17, Liberal-Progressive 4, C.C.F. 1, Independent 1, U.F.O. 31, vacant, 2.

Two M.P.' Lose By Death

Since the last election the government has lost two followers by death, George A. Macpherson in Wellington North and J. W. Sangster in Glengarry. In neither case was a by-election called.

While rumours have been current for several weeks that an election would be called this fall, Premier Hepburn refused to discuss the possibility with questioners.

Provincial Secretary Harry Nixon, Attorney-General Hon. Arthur Leduc and the Liberal Party Organizer for Ontario, Harry Johnson, waited some time outside the premier's office before Mr. Hepburn arrived at 3:45 E.D.T.

He told a waiting group of reporters he would see them "a little later". This was taken to mean he still could not meet before Mr. Hepburn announced the election date.

NOT HUMAN BLOODSTAINS

Toronto, Aug. 4 — (CP) — Tests made by Dr. Gordon Wilson, Toronto Medico-Legal expert, disclosed today that stains on clothing and apartment here occupied by George Roediger and Mrs. Christina Maclennan, Ranger's alleged "wife" and victim, are not human bloodstains, it was learned today. Police are now looking to locate Mrs. MacKenzie.

World Famous Holstein Cow Immortalized in Lasting Metal Statue Erected in Her Honor by Cattleman of Oxford

HAS FAMOUS SON

Woodstock, Ont., Aug. 4 (CP)—Springbank Snow Countess looked down today from the place where she stood over a statue of herself immortalized in lasting metal.

In a little plot of lush, green grass, like the meadows where the Countess once chewed a contemplative cud and set up a world record for production, stood the statue of Oxford County's famous cow. The plot is close by a highway where motorists may stop and wonder.

Ontario's Lieutenant Governor, Hon. Dr. Herbert A. Bruce, came here today to unveil the bronze statute and from many Ontario and eastern United States points came hundreds of cattlemen to do honor to Snow Countess.

On a granite base, the metal Snow Countess stands to mark her amazingly the record of 9,563 pounds of butterfat from 307,550 pounds of milk as a lifetime production. No other cow of any breed ever produced that much on official or semi-official test.

Died Last August

Bred and owned by the late R. Dent, whose farm is east of here, Snow Countess died last August, after giving birth to a calf and the Holstein-Friesian Association of Canada decided to immortalize her at a cost of around $4,000. She was then 17 years old when she died, three years after achieving the world mark for butterfat with 7,547 pounds.

This shattered the previous record of Jersey, Sophie 19th of the Hood Farm in New Jersey. Then, Manitoba farmers went to greater things. On completion of her 10th test she had produced 156,000 lbs. of milk, hung up the present world mark for her cows to shoot at.

The Countess also brought some famous children into the world, daughter and son of Hon. Vincent Farms in Wrightville, Pa., set up Holstein records in show ring stands. A son is hard sire on the Manitoba farm of Hon. T. A. Crerar, Dominion Minister of Mines.

A second son remained on the old Dent homestead, while a third went to Japan two years ago as hard sire on the farms of Baron Iwasaki. Fifteen daughters, Snow Countess set 22 records of performance.

When the Bugle Called All Canada to Arms!

Recruiting . . . training . . . parade . . . then troop trains, ships sail! Finale for those Canadian warriors of 1914.

Twenty-three years ago to-day, Canada entered the Great War along with Great Britain and the Empire and the bugle call to arms rang across the Dominion to summon hundreds of thousands of Canadians to the four years of struggle in France and Flanders. Though the fact of the declaration of war has dimmed in the minds of many Canadians and is but a vague shadow gleaned through school books to the younger generation, conditions in Europe, scene of that struggle, are just as tense, as chaotic and as critical as they were on August 4, 1914. In many Canadian cities the civic celebration of the 23-year-old anniversary will be peace meetings called to assert that the Dominion will never again involve herself in a European struggle.

Gt. Britain Is Building Barricades of Peace On Anniversary of War

LONDON, Aug. 4 (CP)—On the twenty-third anniversary of that sultry August 4, 1914, when war was declared on Germany, Great Britain is building her efforts to build up barricades of peace. While defensive rearmament continues apace, the nation's leaders seek through diplomacy to avert another European holocaust.

Forced, in the midst of a rearming Europe, to spend $7,474,687,500 within the next five years in building up her defence power, Britain is exerting her efforts to maintain peace between Europe's clashing factions. Civil war in Spain and undeclared war in the Far East add to the government's difficulties.

Months ago, efforts by the Spanish Non-Intervention Committee to localize the conflict in Spain would have collapsed but for Britain's efforts. Friendly to France and Russia, who favor the government side in Spain, Britain seeks to smooth their differences with Fascist Italy and Germany, who recognize the insurgents.

ALL BEING MOBILIZED FOR PEACE.

With Germany, freed by her own action of the Versailles Treaty restrictions, becoming again a dominant militaristic power, Italy building up her forces to meet those of France and Russia, Britain determined to rearm but not lost no time about it. Every ounce of the country's industrial capacity and patriotic spirit is being mobilized.

A recent announcement in the House of Commons showed 148 new warships will be under construction for the Royal Navy before the end of the year. A drive for recruiting is under way to add 112,000 men to the regular army and reserves and 100,000 men to the territorial army. This would bring them up to their 1914 strength.

TOTAL IS 1,750 FIRST-LINE PLANES.

Aircraft production has been so stimulated that the country will soon reach its goal of 1,750 first-line planes. Already 1,543 of them are in service. Plans are being studied for maintaining essential railway services during air raids and plans have been drafted for defence of the civilian population.

Plans for defending the merchant navy are being perfected with courses of training for merchant marine officers to fit them for service in the event of war.

More than 122 blast furnaces throughout the country are in full production, turning out steel for warships and guns.

'We Must Fight' Says Ching Wu

Nanking, Aug. 4 (CP-Havas)—"We must fight!" declared Ching Wu, chairman of the Chinese Central Political Council, declared today in a radio address to the nation.

"If a nation is strong it might be able to engage upon an offensive campaign in the hope of a prompt victory," he said. "But China is a weak nation and must seek its salvation in a defensive war."

Shanghai (Thursday), Aug. 5 (CP-Havas)—The Central (Chinese) News Agency reported martial law was proclaimed in Swatow, Southern China, today as many more Japanese warships arrived in the Kwangtung Province port to join a fleet of seven Japanese warcraft concentrated there.

PONTIFF PRAYS FOR "LITTLE FLOCK"

Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Aug. 4 (CP-Havas)—Pope Pius, addressing English pilgrims today, said he constantly prayed for "a single flock under one shepherd", in England. The visitors were from the South-wark Diocese.

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

Woods Hole, Mass., Aug. 4 (AP)—The first step in growing a new eye in an adult animal has been reported by Dr. E. G. Schotte of Amherst College, in the Collecting Net.

He chopped off a Newt's tail into a crystalline lens. Newts are a species of salamander. Though they were adults, a fact which adds to the impressiveness of the experiment.

Newt's Eye From Tail.

Newts have the ability to grow back limbs that the old ones are cut off. But they never grow new eyes. Dr. Schotte removed the crystalline lens of a newt eye and planted it in its place a bit of tissue from a newly growing tail.

In the eye this tissue continued to grow, but it was no longer new tail. It developed into a "well formed crystalline lens".

Two of the changes which took place are known. The eyes of these animals contain an unidentified chemical which has the power to form lens from surrounding tissue of a different kind of tissue.

Newts are not the only animals capable of this. Dr. Schotte found the same thing with eyes of adult tadpoles. The chemical which can fashion eyes is known to exist in many animals.

It appears from Dr. Schotte's report that at least a wide variety of embryonic tissue has the ability to be changed into an eye if put in the right place.

Growing Other Organs.

This same tissue may develop into a different organ if placed where the chemical that directs the fashioning of the other organ, such as a leg or ear, can work on it.

Human beings, it is assumed, develop with aid of these same chemicals before birth.

BLASTING PATH FOR JAPANESE

Nipponese Statement Says Chinese Fled or Perished

Peiping, Aug. 4 (AP)—Japanese authorities proclaimed today that continuous bombardment by their planes had routed western concentrations of the Chinese army and blasted a clear path for the southward march of Japanese troops from this conquered Manchu capital.

The Japanese statement declared Chinese troops, reported to have been concentrated in force at Paotingfu, 85 miles south of here, "perished or fled during the air bombardment."

The announcement, acclaimed from the sky by Japanese dropping in a pamphlet deluge, said, "All North Hopeh Province has been occupied. The troops of the Nanking Government will not come north. If they do the Japanese will strike immediately.

A major engagement was expected, however, at Nankow Pass, 30 miles north of Peiping where 4,000 Japanese troops were gathered for an attack on the Chinese positions north of the pass.

All Japanese Nationals were ordered to evacuate Kalgan, Chinese stronghold and capital of Chahar Province, 100 miles to the northwest.

The Government of China, apprehensive of the safety of the 8,000 Chinese in Japan was reported to have ordered their evacuation from the island empire.

While the Japanese troops at the north were pushing their drive on the Chinese forces in the north, a two-pronged Japanese armies marching in parallel columns in Eastern Hopeh Province, Inner Province, pushed steadily southward the Chinese Central Government against the main stence lines of troops.

BOY KIDNAPPED HELD BY COUPLE; CLAIM PARENTAGE

Donald Horst, 2, Said to be Child of Mr. and Mrs. Regan

ADOPTED AT BIRTH

Only Temporary Arrangement Says Mrs. Regan to Police

Chicago, Aug. 4 (AP)—Robert F. Crowley, assistant state's attorney, said a 30-months-old boy police believed had been kidnapped last night from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Horst, 40, was found today at the home of another couple, who claimed to be his real parents.

The boy, Donald Horst, was recovered by Crowley and state's attorney's police at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Regan and his wife Lydia.

Crowley said Regans came to his office voluntarily this morning after reading newspaper accounts of the baby's disappearance from the Horst residence in an exclusive northwest Chicago section and told him they had the child.

Admit Taking Child.

Mr. and Mrs. Regan admitted, Crowley said, they took the child while Mrs. Horst was sunbathing, to prevent it.

They also denied, however, making any telephone call purporting to be from a friend for $5,000 ransom. Mrs. Horst reported such a call to police shortly after the child was taken.

Circumstances which Crowley said the Regans related and which he said solved the "kidnapping" but left a baby minus to be investigated were these:

Mrs. Regan agreed to let Dr. Rose arrange for care of the child but believed it was a temporary arrangement and signed no papers.

Child Was Adopted.

The child was taken from Mrs. Regan fifteen minutes after its birth in a Chicago hospital, Dr. Rose told Ewert. Ewert was a chauffeur for Dr. Rose.

Fish That Got Away Takes Look at Boat

This is the story of the fish that got away, and the boat that has been since. Monday, while fishing in the Moira River near Plainfield, Ernest Cleaver invested a boat of Belleville, noticed a dark shadow in the water. Cleaver investigated, revealed it to be a large muskie weighing in the vicinity of from twenty five to thirty pounds. Dragging in the water from its mouth which was hooked open, was a piece of a line to which was attached three large hooks. The big fellow had been hooked apparently but had won the fight with the angler.

The fish showed no signs of fear as the fishermen approached, but as they dropped a line overboard, it darted and dred for the bottom and was not seen again.

With practically nearly all the early wheat harvested, reports showed in some cases exceptional yields, early rye and oats are now falling beneath the swiftly moving blades of binders, with yields of oats run from thirty bushels upwards.

The fine yield of early wheat has caused a wave of optimism to be felt by farmers in general over the late varieties. Prince Edward County farmers report a fine crop of factory beans which are now being harvested. Corn for feeding purposes is showing exceptional growth and also will be well filled this fall it is believed. Tomatoes are likewise being an exceptionally heavy crop with canning factories making preparations for handling. 2 EX-SOLDIERS MEET IN CITY AFTER 22 YEARS

Gap of Years Bridged in Moment at Newspaper Office

RECOGNITION

Twenty-two years ago two "kids" stood in front of a recruiting sergeant. Within a few minutes they were made soldiers of the King and were assigned to the 23rd. Battery C.F.A. where they soon became pals. Together they left for overseas and trained in the same training depot in England. Buddies, they slept in the same tent, ate the same food and lived the same life.

Came the fateful day when reinforcements were needed in France. Together they stood in line and together they volunteered to go on the draft. Reaching France they were assigned to the Third Brigade Canadian Field Artillery, and here came the final separation. One went to a battery of the Brigade, while the other was assigned to headquarters staff as a signaller.

Since War's End

From this point they drifted apart, the war ended, the depression came along. Each went his different way, not knowing whether the other had survived the holocaust of war.

But time in its relentless march while it changes as much of the physical cannot delete the associational made in youth. This morning in the office of the Ontario Intelligencer a stranger entered for a friend. He stood talking to a member of the staff when a newspaperman walked by. He looked at the stranger and wrinkled a brow as back memory surged. Pausing he walked over to the stranger and greeted with the more or less familiar conversation of yesterday's days.

Suddenly it came to him. It was his boyhood friend, the one he had not seen since the memorable day in France twenty-two years ago when they had separated in the very shadow of the guns. A few minutes later the long-separated friends shook hands and once again lived the dark days of the war. A second visit a little later found the two both are members of the fourth estate. The stranger is Mr. William Riggs, now of the Windsor Daily Star, and a former Belleville resident and a member of the Ontario Intelligencer staff.

ENGLAND NOT AFRAID OF WAR SAYS J. BONE

In Year Armaments Will be Adequate For Any Situation

QUITE PROSPEROUS

"The present day Englishman is not afraid of war. Within a year, when he thinks the army, navy and airforces will be adequate he will fear no one. Then he will not ask the hostile to have been subjected to in the past." Mr. Jamieson Boss told members of the Belleville Rotarian Club at the weekly luncheon held in the New Queens Hotel yesterday.

In a graphic description of conditions in Canada and Coal Britain, Mr. Boss who recently returned from a visit to the Motherland, drew a fine verbal picture of the present day status of the negotiations and peoples. "We have always had a superiority complex in many the British and I cannot see the reason for this." Mr. Boss declared. "They are ahead of us in social legislation, their unemployment insurance is working well and they do not go in for an excessive subsidization.

"We have always been too self-satisfied and complacent over here. There is nothing to worry about in England things are altogether different. There is a spirit of real prosperity. People are busy, and everyone seems to be comfortably off. For one thing the Englishman knows how to enjoy himself. Everybody seems to be going in for swimming, tennis, cricket and other sports".

Building Boom

There is a decided building boom going on in England, Mr. Boss told his listeners. Everywhere new homes are springing up and this is apparently is the reason for the prosperity of the people. In the five hundred new homes built in Bellevue, he declared, "we would all be wealthy. Even the super-capitalists in Canada have been responsible for the construction of a number of municipalities. What we need here is a National government to get us away from the abyss of politics. Our municipal taxation is far too high and should be remedied." Our railways and canals need remodelling. Our system of national defence should be remodelled". He gave our young people a chance for employment the same as in England. There should be the substitution of Mackenzie King for Bennett, and closer co-operation within the Empire. We are trying to maintain a country and are getting insolvent in the attempt."

Meeting Conditions Fine

"I was distinctly impressed with the booming conditions in England," the speaker pointed out. "There every city has its car park with an attendant in charge. No one parks on the street. Everyone is modern, and one thing that is very noticeable over here is the sad lack of courtesy on the part of drivers. Roads are good, clearly marked out but drivers are careless. Their repair system is a good one with one of the best road systems open. Some cities are building by-pass roads, that is, if you want to pass a city without going through it, it can be done."

Mr. Boss spoke in glowing terms of the beauty of rural England. "It seemed like a huge garden. There are flowers everywhere yet vast expanses of moorlands. London was a revelation to me. There is activity in the world where such cities are taken to direct people. Signs there are printed in three different languages. The city seems to be full of gaiety yet everything seems to be going ahead. The tourist traffic there must be worth millions for the city seemed to be full of travellers from all parts of the world."

Mr. Boss paid a flying visit to France, where he visited Paris first; by taxi then by a Cook's tour which conducted him through several of the leading cabarets of the famous French capital. He visited Versailles and commented on its beauty.

No War Talk

Queried by a listener as to what the feeling regarding war was in England, Mr. Boss replied that there is not as much war talk over there as there is here. "The average Englishman is not afraid of war," he said, "in fact the general feeling is that within a year, with the present armament programme, England will not be afraid of any nation. By that time the army, navy, and air force will be adequate and there will be no need to take the insults as in the past."

"But Britain's prosperity did not come from her armaments." Mr. Boss concluded, "it was from trade protection and not free trade. What we can do over here and one of the best things to do, is to cultivate Empire relations." A vote of thanks was moved by Rivardian L. O. Howard, the speaker was introduced by J. O. Herity in his usual brilliant manner.

W. H. ROBINSON, PUBLISHER

ANNUAL WAR GAMES

The season is at hand when the world's navies and armies pass under review of their admirals and their commanders. It is likely that this late summer and autumn will see some of the most interesting developments. According to news reports from Rome, Italy, will not permit foreigners to have a closeup view of their operations of defence.

In this new era the defence is going to play as large a share as the aggressive side and possibly a greater share in any war which might develop than in any previous war because of the vast range of modern arms of the service, particularly in the range of guns and in the flight of bombing squadrons. It would seem the part of policy in an age of international fears and perturbation that defence secrets be kept to the nations concerned.

Germany is shortly to show to herself the power of her armaments in the largest war exercises since the dread 1914-1918 and the Russian field exercises are the first since the purge of generals and other leaders. The United States is having a field test of the new provisional division, known as the "stream lined" division. This division is modelled after the divisions of Europe and is designed to possess greater mobility and fire power per capita. Under this the total of men is reduced from about 22,000 to 13,000. The horse is gone with two brigadier generals, and the one remaining brigadeless brigadier is to be known as "an infantry adviser". The new division is largely equipped with modern arms, though there is said to be a considerable shortage of such equipment. The aim of the new division is to overcome massed man power by science and strategy in the form of quick movement of troops. This principle is designed for open warfare, though there is still the view that the stalemate of trench warfare may remain as the stumbling block as it has proven in Spain. Military critics say the new defence by reason of its weapons including the new weapon, the Gerand rifle, is superior to the offensive.

Military authorities today have great responsibility resting upon their shoulders in deciding upon the proper tactics and methods for use in any war which may develop. Their aim is to foreknow and to prevent surprises.

A SERMON ON VISIONS

There has never been a great achievement without a dream preceding it, the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Campbell of the Central Avenue Reformed Church, Jersey City, said at New York.

Dr. Campbell warned, however, that "there is a foolish and wise way of dealing with the world of our fantasies."

"To flee from the present stern call of immediate duty into a make-believe world and refuse to grapple with the problems which are rightfully ours is a besetting sin of far too many folk today," he said.

"Some people are bearing far heavier loads than they should because another is running away from his responsibilities into a world of make-believe. Loads are unevenly placed because cowardice and fear have driven some to retreat."

On the other side, Dr. Campbell said that in any great biography one could find a confession of the subject's debt to the dreams and plans of his parents.

"I wonder how much dreaming we do before our children," he went on. "How often do we hold an ideal before them which we know in our hearts will never come true, but which we hope they will see come to reality?

"I believe that some day we are going to have an economic system where our great cities will not be shamed by slums, where every one who wants to work will have work.

"I believe this will come because men today are dreaming of these ideals. Into peace ever come? I believe it will, because men are praying for it and dreaming of it."

CONTROLLING MIND AND BODY

Science may soon offer a treatment to overcome inferiority complex by the use of hormones from the pituitary gland. Development of backward retiring persons into geniuses is a possible development. Psychiatrists declare that many persons with ability and intelligence never make full use of their mental powers because of an inferiority complex.

Event the "runt" may be made to undergo growth by systematic injections of growth hormones.

There is no hope of making a new Einstein or Edison but there is hope of making a backward individual into a competent confident person, able to use his powers to the maximum.

Dogs which have been hereditarily dwarfs have been made to grow.

The end of the giant era is also forecast by control of the secretion of growth hormones.

WORK IS SEEKING WORKERS NOW, instead of workers seeking work, in many cases, a refreshing reversal of conditions which should react very favorably on relief expenditure. Marmora Herald states that "a remarkable change has taken place in North Hastings in employment conditions in the past couple of years. From 1931 until 1936 many municipalities were at their wits end to know how to secure money to take care of the families on relief, in spite of the assistance from provincial and federal governments. Nearly all the municipalities were running heavily in debt with a considerable portion of taxes uncollectable. In some cases 20 to 40 per cent of the people were on relief and many others were only getting enough work to exist. NOW IT IS STATED BY REPRESENTATIVES OF THE VARIOUS MUNICIPALITIES THAT THERE IS NO UNEMPLOYMENT FOR MEN ABLE AND WILLING TO WORK. RELIEF HAS BEEN ALMOST ENTIRELY WIPED OUT EXCEPT FOR A FEW CASES WHERE THERE IS NO ONE ABLE TO WORK." That conditions have returned to normal and in fact above normal is evidenced by the fact vouched for by municipal representatives that road repairs ordered by the government have been held up because it was impossible to hire men for the work.

TAMMANY TIGER GROWLS

TAMMANY TIGER IS GETTING READY FOR ANOTHER CHARGE ON THAT JUICY MORSEL, MANHATTAN. Tammany is a political machine, Democratic, which controls New York most of the time, and handles the millions of dollars which is the yearly budget of the great city. Last election the Tammany tiger was caught napping and a fusion of political partizans and independents elected Fiorello LaGuardia, the little but mighty Italian-American who has given New York good government with a minimum of graft during his term. Now the Tammany forces are gathering to wage battle for the biggest single piece of political patronage in the world and will probably succeed as Mayor LaGuardia has sought to give a businesslike administration rather than to make political friends. His salary is nominally $40,000 a year but he has been content with $22,500 which is more than any Governor of a state received except New York State which pays $25,000.

Smiling Jimmy Walker was one of the most popular of Tammany sponsored New York Mayors, but Jimmy found it advisable to step out of office and the country when investigators came too close to the City Hall for comfort. Mayor LaGuardia found that New York city under Tammany politicians rule had accumulated a deficit of one billion, eight hundred million dollars ($1,800,000,000), about fifty per cent greater than the public debt of the United States in 1916. Under Tammany rule the civic budget was $600,000,000, and when Mayor LaGuardia took hold the budget did not begin to balance, being shy $41,000,000, so there was some job ahead of the little giant.

Good Business Government

LaGuardia has made a good job of the mayorship, unhampered by politicians, and has provided many long needed improvements including modern school, buildings, sewage plants and incinerators, seven million dollars worth of snow-removal equipment, more than double the number of playgrounds and dental clinics for children, and new fire equipment that cut fire losses four million dollars.

One Park Commissioner replaced five formally on the job, and the one commissioner laid out nearly 5,000 acres of new parks and two new municipal bathing beaches. His city law department cleaned up litigation accrued it over fifteen years pending, some of it over thirty, reduced recoveries in suits against the city by 73 per cent.

Tiger Licks Its Chops

All the better picking for Tammany when it returns to power, as return it will unless a miracle happens for it has all the machinery, and the better the record of a Fusion candidate the more certain he is for slaughter at the polls, for Fusion government and good government organizations have no permanent life and soon weary of well doing.

Back in The Red

As a business proposition New York should retain Mayor LaGuardia for several years and get out of the red, if possible, but observers look for political history to repeat itself. Only one thing can save New York and even that might not continue on a permanent basis, for the bankers to refuse any more money to the city until it was organized on a business basis and run as a business by a board of directors, businessmen, not politicians.

POPE IS READY TO RECOGNIZE FRANCO

Insurgent Regime in Spain Extended Formal Relations

Vatican City, Aug. 4 (AP)—Pope Pius was reported today ready to extend formal diplomatic recognition to the insurgent regime of Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

Vatican sources said an official announcement of the new status of Pablo De Churruca, Marquis of Apidama, as the representative of the Insurgent government to the Holy See was imminent.

Apidama has been negotiating with the Pontiff for more than a month to obtain formal recognition of his government and the translation of his position from "unofficial representative" to that of a full-fledged envoy.

Spanish circles have said that no recognition could be expected as long as the outcome of the civil war was in doubt. Although the Vatican is sympathetic to the insurgent cause, they said, it does not want to turn its back on Catholics who support the Spanish government.

Until now the Vatican has extended semi-recognition to both the insurgents and the Valencia government.

Dispatches from Salamanca, seat of the Franco regime, reported the insurgents and the Vatican were exchanging diplomatic courtesies. Archbishop Archena was reported to have been given full diplomatic rank with the title of Charge D'Affaires, at Vatican City.

The Salamanca reports said Monsignor Ildebrando Antoniutti, the Apostolic Delegate to Canada, had been designated by the Holy See as envoy to the Insurgent government.

Monsignor Antoniutti, who has been frequently mentioned as possible Apostolic Nuncio to Spain, was in Rome recently for conferences with church officials. It was said he would remain in Canada now discharged by Cardinal Gomez Y Tomar, whom the Vatican lists as "provisional semi-official representative" to the Salamanca regime.

Letters to the Editor

IN PRAISE OF CANADIANS

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer, Sir,

Through your columns may I, as a visitor from England express my impressions of your lovely country, and of your ever lovelier people?

The past two weeks have been the happiest of my life, staying with my dear friends in Belleville.

First, the friendliness and the hospitality of the Canadians touched a low chord in my heart. This my first visit to Canada, and as I stood in your town of Belleville, I knew that all the people were my friends. They came with hands outstretched, and each one took me to their heart. Their welcome was real. Absent entirely were the puny signs of snobbishness I had noticed in other lands; all those people had come to welcome me to their homes.

Yes Sir! in two weeks I have grown to love Canada. When at the close of my visit, the ship takes me back again across the ocean (maybe for years . . . maybe for ever", I know the tears will be in my eyes,—but the beautiful memory of Canada, and of you all, will be engraved indelibly in my memory.

"I love you so, dear Canada.
"For you means so much to me!
"I love all your people
"And your spreading maple trees."

INTERVENTION BY GOV'T EXPECTED

Strikers And Officials Take "No Surrender" Attitude

Montreal, Aug. 4 (CP)—In the face of "no surrender" stands taken by both sides, government intervention was looked for today in the province-wide strike of 10,000 "omnibus Textile Company employees.

No word had come from Premier Duplessis or his labor lieutenants on the government's immediate intentions, but the Premier's statement that government services always were ready to aid in arbitration of such cases led to the belief his labor department might take a hand in the walkout from nine company plants.

As the strike for a collective labor agreement, shorter hours and wage increases entered its third day, after a brief show of violence on the part of picket-scattered strike fronts, company President C. Blair Gordon and Albert Cote, President of the strikers' National Catholic Federation of textile workers, each claimed preparedness to hold out for months if necessary.

"I don't care if the plants stay closed until Christmas. We'll never deal with an organization that tolerates intimidation and violence," Gordon declared after strikers smashed windows and attempted to close gates of Cote St. Paul plant in eastern Montreal.

Next day Kate caught an early bus to the city. That night she came home looking wilted and perplexed. She had realized in the course of that jumbled day behind a counter of crockery that after paying bus fare and buying lunch, on for six days, there would be practically nothing left of her salary. It was a sign of her intelligence that she quit the job at once, leaving it for a girl closer at hand.

"We'll try to sell more pies and cakes in the Exchange," she told Caroline. "And I'll work up a cottage cheese routine!"

The latter venture proved promising. After a day of canvassing friends and acquaintances and even strangers in town, Kate came home with the good news that she had orders for 28 jars and 4 quarts of cheese to be delivered every Saturday.

"That's wonderful," Caroline said. "Was it awfully hard, Kate asking people to buy?"

"I haven't much pride left," Kate answered. "If our troubles have taught me anything, they've taught me the cheapness of false pride. But one thing I couldn't do, Caroline, I couldn't sell or deliver stuff at the Prentiss and Wiswell back door."

"Well I should say not!" Caroline exclaimed, all sympathy. "I'd rather see you peddling at Mead Meadows!"

"There's an idea!" Kate said with a sharp laugh. "Why not take on 'Jeff, the Busy Mountaineer' as a customer? He has to eat."

"Why, yes," Caroline agreed. Kate was always amazing her.

CHAPTER XXII.

Before the idea could cool Kate obeyed her impulse to add Jeff Howard's name to her list of customers. Caroline chanced on a fine chicken (shabby body, breeches and limp, dusty hat and all) on Brown Boy.

When she reached Mead Meadows she inquired Mr. Howard's whereabouts from a farmhand and learned that he was gathering apples. She tied Brown Boy and went along the familiar path to the orchard. It did not seem possible that this path, worn smooth by generations of feet, had once belonged to a stranger, for it didn't seem right that an old apple tree to yield their fruit to a hateful newcomer.

So keenly did her surroundings affect her that Kate lost her business-like decisiveness and allowed resentment to have its way. Only the trees let the man who lived either from voice or face, how she felt.

It amused her to see his surprise when he looked up from the basket he was packing and found her there. Kate said, "I've come on business, Mr. Howard. My sister and I are taking orders for cottage cheese and baked goods. We'd like to list you for regular deliveries."

"Well!" Jeff exclaimed, surprised and flushing red from stooping. "Cake and pie, too. The man I've got cooking for me can't make either. Only bake some doughnuts regularly," he corrected himself hastily, with a thoughtful look at the cabin.

Kate's eyes were discreetly lowered to her order book. "Two cakes a week, say? And a couple of pies, Mr. Howard?"

"Surely. Yes, indeed."

"Kate said, "Your Scott cottage cheese? Would you like a pint of that delivered twice a week?"

Salesmanship was now in Kate's blood. She made another suggestion. "We have very good baked biscuits. If you'd like several dozen of them each week, it could be arranged."

Jeff Howard of the mountain-side's distaste for the "frills and fancy business" that Blue Grass people set such store by. But then, he reflected hastily, he could feed them on fresh chickens. He calmly ordered four dozen a week. Kate's prices he accepted without quibbling.

"Per cake, will deliver the things," Kate told him. "Every Wednesday and Saturday evenings, if that's agreeable?"

"'Twill be," Jeff replied, experiencing a sense of disappointment. "Have you other customers, Mr. Howard, about cake icing and pie fillings?"

"None at all. Just anything you can fix up."

"I shan't fix any of it up," Kate said sharply. "Our cook will do it all. Thank you, Mr. Howard, for the orders. Goodby."

She went away and left him looking quizzically after her. He was undeniably handsome that shade she resented it. What right had the creature to look like that—his sculptured throat bare, his face bronzed, his eyes narrowed in a way that might mean either mockery or admiration? What right had he to be baffling and disturbing?

As she rode home she remembered her lie and thought, "I told Caroline how hagh's much pride Jeff left. Well, I must be content with it! Why should I mind working for him?..... But I do, because I hate him! I'll not let him picture me toiling over the food he eats!"

Then she dismissed Jeff Howard as a person and considered him only as a surprisingly good customer. She let the reins fall on Brown Boy's neck while she made jotted figures in the order book.....

Yes, she and Caroline would be able to keep the family above water at this rate. Sheriff Jesse Morgan Prentiss a thing or two! Why, she thought hopefully, shouldn't Mead cottage cheese become as famous as Mead beans used to be? And there was an idea! Make enough money on the cheese and baked goods to build a modern house! They oughtn't to grieve, he said, because all animals, even the finest, must die sooner or later.

"Who don't think of Hyacinth as being old," Kate protested. She turned to Caroline. "Don't you?" she cried, fiercely for Hyacinth herself, whose ways had been so gentle. Caroline had not answered. Her cottage cheese business which was to have brought a modern house, had been up in the baked ham business. The veterinary had no idea what hopes had come crashing to earth with the death of this one animal.

Caroline exclaimed in pained surprise. "Why, we'll have more milk and butter for the family, Kate!"

"You'll have to get a fresh young cow," Kate said, bitterly. "Or another Jersey. Or would you consider a Holstein?"

"We'll see about it." Caroline replied, quietly.

They went to the house and broke the news to their grandfather, who was confined to his room with a sprained back. Kate said, "Grand'dad, you know we told you Hyacinth was sick this morning? She died in the night."

"Died?" cried Major Mead. He started to get up, but was pulled back by his child's pain in his muscles. He, too, felt the pain intermingling of a personal and economic loss.

Kate said, "I know how you feel, Grand'dad. But we mustn't let it be a grieving just for good old Hyacinth. Bulah you're thinking about the milk and butter dollars and cents, too!"

Bulah saw him groping in the drawer of his bedside table and pulled out a roll of bills. "I haven't begun to economize yet," she said with a little shrug of pain in his muscles. He, too, felt the pain intermingling of a personal and economic loss.

Coiffure is Important To a Woman's Beauty
PERMANENT WAVE HELPFUL

Kay Francis
A becoming coiffure adds to this beauty's charm
By HELEN FOLLETTE
UNLESS THE fairy godmother has given a girl naturally curly hair, there's nothing to it but to submit the "old mop" to the permanent waving machine. If one can't limit the "bollings" to two a year, one is lucky.
Methods have improved; now the hair suffers little. Yet, there is bound to be a suspension of dryness. That is why the beauty shop boosts urge conditioning treatments for the customers. Too frequent waving and no special care means that hairs will shrivel and that the new wave won't be as strong as it should be.

Keep a Child From Being A Bully
Attitude of Parents Toward Him is Big Factor, Says Writer
By Lida GRENELLE
MRS. SNOW, who lives across the street, had been treating Mother rather coldly lately—or was it her imagination? Mother never had known the woman well enough by as the mother of Jimmie Snow who, until the last month or so, was always appearing on the porch steps for Johnnie. The boys must have had a quarrel.
Funny, though, Mother reflected; Gertrude Smith had been behaving oddly, too! She still comes around for a cup of tea once a week, but her son, Thomas, never does any more.
"Johnnie, what's the answer " Mother asked one day. "Why don't Tommy and Jimmie come around any more? Why aren't they ever home when you go to see them?"
"Oh, then they're just a couple of sissies."
That was all she could get out of Johnnie.
It was Aunt Ruth who cleared up the mystery.
It turned out that Johnnie, according to his Aunt Ruth, had been bullying his little cousins. He frightened little Isabel into tears, Ruth said, and had taken a stick to Cousin Walter because Walter wouldn't do what Johnnie had told him—jump in the lake, or some silly thing like that.
Didn't Know It
"Don't you know, Johnnie, that nobody likes a bully?" Mother asked later.
"But I don't bully, Ma. I don't even know what it means."
It was hard to believe that Johnnie did bully; he was kind and gentle and had been brought up with more than ordinary fair play for children today. Father had said he wouldn't have a spoiled "brat" around his home and had insisted upon instant obedience, even from the beginning.
Now Mother wondered whether Johnnie wasn't trying to dominate other children as Father had dominated him. Of course, Father hadn't liked that sort of thing, either, coming from a child's point of view; when somebody bigger than you tells you what to do, it forced his will on you all the time?
Father had always had complete power over Johnnie, and perhaps Johnnie resented it down deep in his heart. He envied Father being able to tell people to do things and make them do it. Johnnie played "Father" to all the other children, so long as they obeyed him. And so bullies are made.
And how are bullies cured? By a reversal of the principle. By a change in father's attitude.

GOOD MANNERS
by MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN
(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)
Leave-Taking
Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
After a man has been introduced to a lady in the lady's home, should the man, when leaving, say that he is glad to have met her, or should he disregard the introduction unless the lady speaks first.
G.
Yes, the man, in this circumstance, would indeed graciously express his pleasure in the introduction and for the hospitality. He might say, for instance, "It has been a real pleasure to meet you, Miss Allen, and you may be very kind to let me come to your home with Miss Jones. Thank you very much."
Note of Thanks
Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
Friday is my third day home, from the hospital after having had a major operation. I received many beautiful flowers. Should I write a personal note of thanks to each one making for the flowers? If so, what sort of letter should I write? Please give me a sample.
S.
Yes, to each one of those kind friends you would write a note of thanks, worded something like this: Dear Dorothy:
What an ever-thoughtful and kind friend you are! The box of Spring flowers were gloriously beautiful, and what a message of friendliness and cheer they brought with them as they came to me in the hospital. They made the room (and my heart too) glow with their radiant colors and their gay spirit. Thank you. With all my heart, for them and for your goodness to me.
I'm at home now, and I do hope that as soon as you can you will come to see me. I want so much to chat with you.
Love to you, and again my deepest appreciation.
Devotedly,
Wedding Gift?
Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
1. I have received an invitation to a wedding and no invitation to the reception. Should I send a gift?
2. Should the gift be sent to the bride's home, or how should it be given?
W.
1. Whether or not we send a wedding gift depends on our own wish. If we know the couple very well, naturally we would want to send a gift for the new home. In your case, if there is to be a large reception and especially if you were not invited, it would indicate that you do not know the couple very well, and so you might not necessarily send a gift. Or you might wish to send a gift anyway.
2. A wedding gift is correctly sent to the bride-to-be and not sent to the home, as soon as possible after we have received the invitation.
No Ready-Made Thanks
Dear Mrs Beeckman:
If a club that you belong to gives you a shower, do you send cards to them for the gifts as you unwrap them, or is it necessary to send out cards later?
If by "Thank you cards" you mean the correct form of cards of thanks...they are never correct. It isn't either necessary to write notes of thanks for these gifts, but it is a most gracious and appreciative thing to do.
The Girl Waits
Dear Mrs. Beeckman:
If a girl goes to a dance with her brothers, and several boys ask her to dance and she marks them down in her dance book as first, second and third, should she rise and go to the partner who engaged the third set, when the third set is played, or should she wait for him to come to her? A thinks she should rise and go part way, and B thinks she should wait for him to come to her. C thinks she should go to him and tell him that it is his dance.
Readers
It is right "the girl should wait for her partner-for-the-dance to come to her.
Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

SLEEK AND SHINING are the smart black satin dresses seen 'round town. A beauty has a collarful of sparkling, diamond-shaped pleated chiffon insert at the waist, and a long double panel sash of pleated black chiffon.
"IN THE PINK" nowadays means that we are wearing a smart pink frock. Adir has a beauty of an ensemble, with the dress of pale, dusty pink crepe. The bodice top is a pleated berlha that can fall at front or be spread over the shoulders. The redingote is of dark pink crepe in black.
PERFECT AIR for a black or navy frock comes in the form of a large, square bag, crush bell and strap of black satin. It's a beauty of an leather.
DIFFERENT but most effective is a large black capeline with a very tall, conical crown. "The hat that flies and did it needs" is the late Summer and early Autumn new sensation. Very pretty, too.
STRAWS SHOW the way the fashion wind is waiting. Forever-and-ever-very-pretty little evening jackets made in a glistening straw worn over a beauty in black with a girdle to match, is of black straw lined with black satin or satin.
A BIG SUCCESS by an English designer, is a dinner suit, a bolero and slim skirt in woodlike, cocoa color position sequins in mahogany brown. A pale green frock, a bow tie and sash in taffeta, the same color as the sequins, complete a striking suit.

Little Benny's Note Book
We was eating breakfast and pop was looking at the headlines and he said, it's funny how a day as I have looming ahead of me, not an thing unusual, and all the time I'm on my I dreds it.
Then he said, labor disputes seem to of bobbed up since yestiday, pop said. That must make all the labor leaders very happy, he said, and ma said, Pixi I've got to have you to town with me today as I need reading glasses, not that I can't see but I want to see what he thinks.
It's getting so it's impossible for pop to get to his job to work even if you found it, a vicious circle with one beginning and no end in site, pop said, and ma said, And that's the way it is with me about a pair of shoes that I should never of taken in the first place and I'm still mad at them, they should of sold me, and U deer it's such a trial and tribulation to get anything at Hookbinders, it takes hours.
I see any headlines about the royal Windsor family, they said, and I got to get to work my attention, pop said, and ma said, I doubt if I'll have time to snatch a bite of lunch, not that I've really been eating much lunch because I'd rather to abstain from my own free will rather than lack of sinter, and I'm going to the hospital to see how Sally Jarden is getting on, and I've got to go stop and see some nice flowers for her, and then I'm to meet the prize selection committy and I'll have a perfectly frantic 2 hours rusting from store to store with them, she said.
By the way, you mike fix my old fishing idousers for me today, so I'll be able to have them for Setiday, that is if you're not doing anything, pop said, and ma said, Willyum Potts, really, sometimes I could slay you without a moment's compunction.
Why, for Peet sake? pop said, don't tell me it is my fault in my good opinion of myself, he said.
And he left for his office whistling like somebody feeling better instead of worse.

BOY KIDNAPPED

Crowley added his investigation indicated that the boy had been taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hurst and a birth certificate was filed there, purporting to show the Hursts were the natural parents.

Recently Ewert told Mrs. Regan the Hurst's child was here, Crowley said, and Mrs. Regan decided to take it "at the first opportunity".

While Crowley maintains Regan told him that Ewert said he was born at Mrs. Hurst's home a birth certificate for Donald Olin Hurst, stating the child was born to Mrs. Hurst on Jan. 4, 1925, at same residence, home of friends of the Hursts.

Captain Daniel Gilbert of the Stale's Attorney's police, added to other baffling phase to the case by declaring that "Hurst was the victim of a fraud perpetrated by his wife."

Gilbert said Hurst was notified he was a father and found Mrs. Hurst in bed with a child and was congratulated by friends.

Toronto, Aug. 4.— (CP)— The Base Metal mining issue play on the Toronto share market today and the whole group registered gains in the medium-price group. Golds posted a few lower minor than gains. Industrials were irregularly lower and the Western Oils were barely firm. Sherritt-Gordon stood out in the proceedings as it pushed up to the $3 mark and closed around $2.95 for a bet gain of 22 cents. About 20,000 shares of the stock changed hands.

Good action appeared also in Waite-Amulet, Hollinger and Pend Oreille, all at gains of 5 to 10 cents. Coast Copper added 25 cents, Falconbridge about the same and Sudbury Basin, Buck Waite and Reeves-Donald advanced the latter going 15 cents to 80. Nickel was also strong and Noranda and Hudson Bay dropped fractions. Edermac firmed nominally and Base Silvers were quiet and steady.

Kerr-Addison and Hard Rock were offered in a few cents in considerable quantity and closing prices were narrowly lower for McIntyre, Sisco, Hollinger, Premier, Mining Corporation, Oro Plata and Read-Authier. Temiskaming was again in demand and the price firmed above the $1 mark while the close was up for Lake Shore, Macassa, O'Brien, Wright Hargreaves, Kirkland Lake, Lapa Cadillac, Macleod-Cockshutt, Chibougamau, Darkwater and Dorval-Siscoe.

Steels, Foods and Banks turned strong in the afternoon market while the Utilities, Beverages and Building Stocks continued on the side of softness. The Canadian Car and Foundry Stocks, Dominion Foundries, Steel Company of Canada Stocks, Laura Secord, National Grocers and Canners A were up.

Market Comment

In June the U.S. building industry experienced a drop of 40 per cent of the 1929 average, after getting up to 50 per cent of that level earlier this year and after three years in which it remained under, 20 per cent of that average. Interest indicated in the industry are not content to rely upon domestic demand alone to round out the recovery for they are aware of pronounced signs of normal activity in France and steadily shrinking construction there, year by year, in spite of the prospect of increasing wages, shorter hours and higher building costs trends.

The June recession in American Building is blamed in part on increased costs, largely labor. Great inequalities exist throughout the country in wages, with non-union labor obtaining a decided advantage along from the union in some localities. This has helped to keep the building recovery highly irregular geographically.

McColl-Frontenac Oil Making Some Back

With six months of the current fiscal year of McColl-Frontenac Oil Company now passed, the betterment of operations in the first quarter is decidedly improved showing over the first three which ends January 31st, 1938. Not only is there an expanding demand for oil and gasoline, but consumption per car is the company last year should show likewise an increase. Profits in the net income divisible among the shareholders. At the present rate of business, it would not be surprising to those close to the company's affairs if $1.50 a share were earned this year on the 660,000 shares of common stock outstanding against 45 cents a share last year.

One of the contributing factors in the betterment this year is obviously the larger amount of tourist traffic. Not only is the total each tourist is included to spend a little more than a year ago, but when the economic recession had not entirely lifted. In this connection, it is interesting to note that those provinces which have made the most determined efforts to improve and build new roads from the international border to the main resorts, are getting the lion's share of the tourist dollars. It has been been felt that the Province of Quebec could share much more generously in the benefit of the tourist trade if roads and hotel accommodation were improved. This effort is already being made in this direction.

The company's oil-producing properties in the Turner Valley area are presently producing at the rate of about 2,000 barrels a day, while facilities are on hand to increase this ready for shipment during the next few months. Refining capacity is ample in Canada and elsewhere are being put in shape to meet the increased loadings which have been leased out to operator-owners are being kept in readiness for production under the careful surveillance of the company's engineers.

Taxation, divided among different governments in the form of sales tax, provincial and municipal taxes, which amounted to over $1,000,000 last year. What does not include income tax), continues to be a great burden on the company's operations. In most provinces of Canada, the consumption tax on the motoring public contributes a large disproportionate amount of the total taxation. What this is reflected in the results of a company such as McColl-Frontenac.

FATHER STABS FOUR CHILDREN

Wife Also Stabbed Five Times And May Not Live

Columbus, Ky., Aug. 4 (AP)— Accused by his wife of slashing their four children to death with a butcher knife and stabbing her, W. J. Morse, 45, was flashed away from a crowd of threatening neighbors late last night it was learned today.

The wife Mrs. Jane Morse 43, was stabbed in the back five times and a physician who examined her today said she might not live. The tragedy occurred at the Morse home near this little Mississippi river town.

Mrs. Morse said her husband became enraged at her in a argument when she remonstrated with him, as she said she had frequently done, over his treatment of the children. She said Morse grabbed the knife, ran to a bed and slashed the throats of their son, Theodore, 5, and their daughters, Ines, 3, also Margaret Elizabeth, 1. She said he next plunged the blade into the back of eldest child, Billy Lee, 8, five times. The child ran from the house where Mrs. Morse found him dead about 100 yards away.

Town Marshal Charles Burton was surrounded by neighbors who heard Mrs. Morse's screams. He arrested Morse on a highway four miles from here and took him to jail at the County Seat, Clinton. A crowd gathered and the man was hastily sent to another jail which officers kept secret.

BIRTH CONTROL CLINICS CLOSING

Massachusetts Organization Recommends Action

Others Said

Boston, Aug. 4 (AP)—The Birth Control League of Massachusetts today decided to recommend to local committees the closing of clinics in Massachusetts, after raids in Brookline, Brooklyn and in Boston, and the court arraignment of one of its physicians.

Mrs. Leslie D. Hawbridge, President of the League, said the decision was made by the League executive Board "in spite of their complete confidence in the legality of the work."

She said the League suggested the closings "only because the legality of the Mother's Health Bureau (one of the names for the clinics) has now been questioned."

The physician was confident, she said, that further court decisions would soon confirm the right of physicians to give contraceptive advice to sick married women to preserve their health.

Will Not Race Horses Unless Purses $500

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 4.—(CP) —Members of the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Association will not race at Stamford Park Niagara Falls this year unless purses offered are raised to $500, it was decided at a meeting held at the Hamilton Jockey Club here today.

President George Hardy said he had received letters from W. J. Demetre of Montreal, Managing Director of Stamford Track, offering to increase purses to $500 and the trot meetings for small purses, but that he would not race himself themselves with the Breeders Association they will have to race amongst themselves. This was in effect at Hamilton Jockey Club today when the Secretary's offices was opened for tomorrow's entries.

The eight owners who signed the petition for larger purses and went back on their word by racing at the Hamilton track have been fined by the Breeders Association and will not be allowed to race standing until the fines are paid.

LOCKMEN SCORE SURPRISE WIN OVER POINTERS

Defeat Loop Leaders 1-0 in The First Game of Playoffs

WINNERS OUTHIT

Two Rallies by Losers Cut Off by Fine Plays at Plate

Upsetting the old dope bucket, the Belleville Sargents won the initial semi-final play-off game of the Belleville Softball League with a narrow one to nothing victory over the erstwhile league leading Point Anne "Cementmen" at Coleman Plats last evening. The game was featured by a scorching pitching battle between Eddie Schreiber, hurling for the victorious "lockmen" and Lorne Bateman, elongated local shortstop-pitcher, with the former getting the nod.

Spectacular fielding predominated as both plates were pitcher-pitcher super-duper support in the field, making sensational pick-ups and catches to thrill the crowd. The lone Bell-Sargent tally came in the fourth frame and ultimately was the result of an error. Cole opened with a double and went to third on Bushell's sacrifice. Lupenette hit to deep short and Sero, Point Anne shortstop, threw wide to first, Cole out at the plate. The throw was good, but Gray dropped the ball as Cole came sliding into the plate and was safe for the only tally of the game.

Fine Control

Both hurlers showed marvelous control, not a single walk being issued by either team. Bateman struck out four and Schreider whiffed three. Point Anne made their big bid in the eighth, as Reid singled, but was forced at second by Bateman who subsequently went to second on a passed ball and advanced to third, when all were safe on a fielder's choice with Murray at bat. With two aboard and one out, Merry sailed to Kiser in right and after the catch Bateman streaked for the plate, but Kiser's peg-in was perfect and Bateman was a third out and the "cementmen" lone rally was abruptly terminated.

Winners Outhit

The Sedore-led Point Anne squad out-hit the "lockmen" seven to five but the Bell-Sargents were smart to take advantage of all opportunities and were deserving of their win. Bob Caulin, with a brace of singles, led the batters of both clubs, although Cole's double in the fourth was the only extra base hit of the day. Murray, Sero, Whitehead, Cemerra'e and Bateman hit singles for the losers while Barrisve, Kiser, McMartin and Lupenette counted the one base blows, registered by the Barnett crowd. The Point Anners booted the ball for four errors, while Bushel committed the only three chalked up against the "lockmen" but his fine fielding on the last two acts of the game, especially his pick-up on Green's stinging in- drive, more than made up for the one miscue that did not enter into the scoring. Both hurlers possessed more than the usual amount of speed, with Schreider the surlier s'ant of the two of the clutches. The Bell-Sargents had eight men left stranded on the runways, while the "cementmen" only left five. A fast double play, Bushel to Cole, stopped a Point Anne rally in the second. Schreider retired the side in order in the second, third, fifth and sixth, while Bateman had men on bases in every inning, except the fourth, but failed to add to his troubles. Gray handled Schreider well and made a sensational dive to tag Bateman out at the plate in the eighth.

The second game in the league semi-final playoffs is between the Ajaxes Juniors and the second placed Corbin Jacks at. Coleman Plats early this evening.

The line-ups — Belleville Sargents—Barrisge 3b; McMartin cf; McGuire ss; Kiser rf; Gray lf; Bushell 2b; Lupenette lf; Green rf; and Schreider p. Point Anne—Murray lf; Merry ss; Sero 2b; Cemerra c; Cole 1b; Whitehead 2b; Tummon cf; Scott and Genereaux rf and Bateman p.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

It was a surprised and sad bunch that wended their various ways back to Point Anne last night after the softball game. As a matter of fact a lot of "mushball" fans took in last night's play-off topping the local Bell-Sargents would win, but not expecting to see the "lock-men" stage such a surprise as winning 1-0 over the highly heralded "cementmen." Well, that is what happened and to the victors went the day's spoils, and rightly so. Eddie Schreider hurled one sweet beautiful softball game, as did his opponent Lorne Bateman, but Schreider was too effective in the pinches for the slighter one, Sedore. True enough the "lockmen" scored their lone tally on an error, but that is part of the game.

What a sigh of relief went up from the Belleville fans when Umpire Thomas waved Bushell out at the plate in the eighth, after a clean single to left field. Gray had the elongated Point Anne receiver blocking the kid never giving Bateman a chance to reach the plaster behind the batter's box and that old vulnerable spot, the catch. The fans screaming last night's initial softball play-off game home satisfied they had witnessed one of the tidiest pitching struggles seen locally in many years. Prior to the league play-offs all of the talk was Corbins and Point Anne, maybe last night's game will wake the fans up, especially as the Corbins have a tough problem on their hands in their play-off game at the Plats tonight versus the Ashcan kids. The fact the Point Anne team only had five left and second and did not score itself speaks for the fine hurling exhibition given by Schreider. Although Bateman permitted only five hits while his opponent yielded seven, all singles. Art Cole smashed the only extra base hit of the game and scored the only run.

Congratulations to Harry Ridley, Belleville Golf Club member, who won second low net in the second round of the Kingston Whig-Standard's Eastern Ontario golf tournament at the Limestone City on the holiday. Harry is considered one of the best young golfers in the city and surely upheld Belleville on Monday.

We observe they are having more than the usual difficulties with their umpiring system in the Niagara District League this season. As Vin Urquhart, former Belleville ballsier, and Vern Bishop, ex-O.B.L. hurler, are both in the N.D.L. this year, we have been watching with interest the weekly games played in the circuit. Not infrequently we find a nine inning game lasting well over two and one-half hours and more than a three-in lies much of the trouble experienced the first year that we know from some 17 years of baseball. Last night's game of many games played in the Central League last year that was completed under the 90 minute mark. The Niagara District League would jack up the umpires and instruct them to keep the game moving with the fans peeping the boards and bellies broke laughing. We understand the Ontario club is employing Toronto referees these days and all has been forgiven.

The ballyhoo on Tommy Parr is pouring into the various sports departments all over the continent. Parr seems either egotistic or confident he can take the champ, Joe Louis, or "Louis", as Parr calls him, without much trouble. Others have thought that, but only one has realized this ambition, that being when Schmeling lagged behind Louis, dropped the decision 15 round affair the latter part of this month at the Yankee Stadium. Louis is to receive 40 and Parr 20 per cent. of the gate receipts. Taking into consideration Parr was working in a Welsh coal mine for but a few years ago, he's not doing too badly, as Parr you look at it—win, lose or draw.

This afternoon the Elwanis Juniors go off the South Hastings League play-off lid at the Fair Grounds versus the second placed Peterboro nine, with the best two possible games in Purdoro. In the meantime the Chanilton "Killers" tackle the Latta nine in their hair of the league semi-finals. The winners subsequently meet in a five game series.

Coach 'Twig' Woodley should soon be on the D.R.A.A. trail's as the Junior Provincial baseball play-downs commence to shed the 11th this year. The local juniors winners of the Lake Shore group, have been drawn as the team which will likely be Herb Ralph's Peterboro nine. The Elwanis kids have the advantage of a whole season's play in the N.H.L. where they have been facing better than intermediate pitching all times. The kids should be able to make short work of the average Minor monsters they might meet on their way up.

BRANTFORD PAIR RUN ONE-TWO

(By The Canadian Press)

J. G. Fair of Brantford, Ont., saw his horses run 1-2 at Connaught Park, Ottawa, yesterday in win the second race of the day at the track. Fair's Tabasart and Trouble Maker finished in that order ahead of eight other juveniles.

The featured Hull City purse was won by Mrs. V. Carmichael's Calvolo, a 7 1-2 to 1 outsider. Ridden by Jockey Hershy Cohen, the colt closed fast through the stretch to beat out Chatterly. Fidelo was third.

At Hamilton Belle Pills trimmed seven rivals during the day's card to capture the Connaught purse. Ridden by Jockey Gerald Murgh broke fast and led the full mile and an eighth distance. Isle Flirt was second and House Afire third to beat the heavily-played Dainty Rose.

The win was Lindbergh's second of the day and his sixth of the meet. Doubles Trouble's victory in the third by three lengths over Widow, a long shot.

Frikiness scored Charlie McTague's second win of the card in the fourth. Frikiness was easily romping home eight lengths ahead of Fair Wave with Buckaroo of the Parkwood Stable in the show position. Tokay and Frikiness moved out of the maiden class by virtue of their wins.

NOW OR NEVER FOR ORIOLES

Only 6 1-2 Games From Playoffs And Month to Go

(By The Associated Press)

It's now or never for Baltimore Orioles and the Birds believe their big guns are equal to the task.

In seventh place, 6 1-2 games out of the first division with little more than a month of the season to go, the Marylanders are faced with a situation that International League observers would have labeling ridiculous at the start of the season. Five-season favorites to cop the pennant, they'll have to hustle every minute of the way to make fourth place and a playoff berth.

It was several of last year's standbys who brought Orioles a 10-2 triumph over Montreal Royals last night. Big "Pooch" Puccinelli Woody Abernathy and Smokey Martin wielded one heavy club. They belted out seven hits that made off Lauri Myllytaagas, drove home six of the runs, and smashed out a home run apiece.

Another second division club with playoff visions Rochester Red Wings blanked Jersey City Giants 1-0 behind the five hit pitching of Nube Kleinke. Rollie Sills pitched seven-hit ball for the Jerseys but a single by Emil Crabtree in the sixth scored the winning marker.

Toronto Leafs moved over to Mount Forest, Ont., to play Syracuse Chiefs and took the Salt City team in camp 7-4 and 10 innings. The win sapped a six-game losing string of the Leafs.

Newark Bears, off on another of their victory sprees, are chaling up their fifth in a row by walloping Buffalo 8-4.

CORONER TO PROBE DEATH OF FIGHTER

Pittsburgh, Aug. 4.—(AP)—Deputy Coroner J. V. Davidson ordered a "thorough investigation" today into the death last night of Johnny Page, Chicago lightweight, 26 hours after he was knocked out by Eddie Davis.

Davidson said a post mortem would be held and he would question Zivic, Davis' manager, and examining physicians and ring officials.

A brain concussion caused the death of the 26-year-old fighter, who crumpled under a smashing right to the head in the ninth round of a scheduled 10-round semi-final match Monday night.

They're there in the "clutch"—The Yankees.

A series for the American Baseball League lead, an all star game, and a world series may not mean the blind leaguers—but not Colonel Ruppert's boys in white. The Yanks are swing their blade specs and bring home the bacon.

Every time their mod moment—ous feats for days when the competition is tight the stands full.

Employing the home run technique the Yanks blew down Chicago White Sox in both games of a double header, yesterday, 7-3 and 5-3 and pushed their league lead to three games from the Cubs by taking the season's largest weekday crowd.

Home runs, trade mark of the Yankees since 1921, won both games. Gehrig hit his 22nd with three on in the eighth inning of the second game to climax a bombardment that began when Lou Gehrig, starting his 1,900th consecutive game, shot No. 22 into the stands with two mates aboard in the first inning of the opener.

DiMaggio Hits Another

In between these two wallops the Yanks batting Bandini, Joe DiMaggio and Tony Lazzeri took care of the scoring. Joe hit homer No. 32 with two mates aboard in the seventh inning of the first contest and Tony got one in each game.

Chicago White Sox Bill Cissell, Gabby Hartnett, and Frank Demaree hitting homers, downed the Phillies 4-1, as Lee buried his 12th victory. The win gave the Cubs a seven-game lead over the Giants, who dropped a tight one in the 10th to the Reds, 3-2. The Pirates picked up a game and a half on the Giants by beating the Dodgers 5-4, 10-4.

Bob Crove pitched the Red Sox to a 13-3 triumph over the Indians and Earle Brucker's homer beat the Tigers relief ace Al Benton. The Senators shaded the Browns, 3-2, in the 12th on Johnny Stone's single.

5,000 Pounds Lead Ballast Off Endeavour

(By A. DC Merkey)

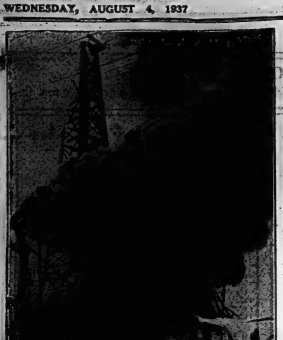
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Newport, R.I., Aug 4.—(CP)—Two races down to the Fleet Defender Ranger, Endeavour II, British challenger for the America's Cup, faced her third sailing engagement today with Harold S. Vanderbilt's craft which, in the opinion of yachtsmen here, remained an overwhelming favorite to retain the trophy.

This opinion prevailed in spite of changes made in T. O. M. Sopwith's boat. Her trim has been changed. She was lightened of more than 5,000 pounds of lead ballast preliminary to the "big blow" breeder would become a more formidable contender in the light weather prevailing off this port at this season of the year.

Things need new more triumphs in the best-of-seven series to turn back the 16th attempt of the British Empire to recover the cup held in the United States since 1851.

Almost Lost in the Fog



The two previous races of the current series, Saturday and Monday, were won decisively by the defender with Endeavour II so far behind she was almost out of sight in the fog.

This yachting capital meantime took on a gala complexion in trib-

ASBESTOS-CLAD FIREMEN FIGHT OIL BLAZE

Staging a dramatic three-hour fight against blistering heat and choking smoke, asbestos-clad firemen, wearing oxygen helmets to withstand the terrific heat, battled a fire which destroyed three oil wells, derricks and equipment at Santa Fe Springs, Calif. This photograph shows firemen combating the blaze, using water under high pressure, artificial fog, and chemicals, in their effort to smother the flames that menaced the fabulously valuable oil field.

Yaller Dog

By HELEN J. HEINE

WNU Service

Pete was my dog from the very first. I picked him up one day when I was down in Eastbourne. Seems he took to me right off and after that he never made friends with another soul except once, just once.

The same day that I picked up Pete I met Nellie Roach. I lived down near my un-Pine mountain. Hmmed. Every so often I'd get her up here. Sometimes I'd go down to Eastbourne in search of excitement, parties and likker.

This time I'd had the likker first which accounted for the mess I got myself into. I'd had just enough to make me irresponsible when I got attached to the stray. Pete, and then met up with Nellie Roach. She was just as much fed up on the town as I was on Pine mountain and she was lonesome, too.

I say so and say: "Well, come on, let's celebrate, I got money."

"O' K" says she.

When I got ready to start back she begged me to take her along. Finally I said I would.

I wanted to be the right thing, so I rowed old Pappy who was a justice of the peace and he married us. Afterwards we got a load of grub and followed by the yaller dog, Pete, hoofed it up to my cabin on Pine mountain.

I was used to bein' alone. I had my hunting. Nellie had never been alone in her life. She was afraid of guns and wouldn't have gone hunting on a bet.

When I went hunting, Pete always went along. He got as crazy about hunting as I was. Every time he saw me get out the gun he'd almost throw a fit, he was so tickled. Besides, he was afraid of Nellie and was always under foot when he was around her.

Nellie didn't have a thing to keep her occupied except the little bit of housekeeping there was to do in the one-room shack. She got the fidgets from stayin' alone and by the time Pete and I got back she was ready with a piece of her mind. She had very strong opinions about hunters and dogs which she wasn't stingy about givin' out.

I'd always had a sort of banneriu' to go to Africa to hunt lions and once I mentioned it to Nellie. She nearly took my head off.

Two fellers named Sam and Jake used to come up to hunt with me sometimes. They made all sorts of fun of Pete.

Pete's good enough for me." I'd always say.

One day Sam and Jake told me about a convict that had escaped and said some folks thought he might be hidin' somewhere's on Pine Mountain. It worried me a little. I took to lookin' for him when I went huntin', and I let Pete loose to protect Nellie.

But I didn't see hide nor hair of him and pretty soon a half forgot about him. One day I asked Nellie if she cared if I took Pete along and she said: "No, take the miserable cur. I'm sure rid of both of you."

Pete was tickled silly. We'd walked about a mile or so and had come to a place all covered with thick brush so tall you couldn't see to right nor left, when all at once right in front of us up rose a man.

My hand shook as I cocked my gun. I was so darned surprised, but before I could pull the trigger something happened that surprised me still more. Old Pete ran right up to the man with his fool tail a-wagin' the fit to kill and jumps all over him like he was his long-lost brother.

The man dropped down into the bushes and disappeared.

I yelled: "Pete!" "You goah dummed fool you! You crazy old cur!"

He crouched own with his tail between his legs as if he had a guilty conscience. By the time I got back to the shack I was out of temper. I told Nellie what had happened and asked if she'd ready for me with one of her snappy remarks her face got as red as a brick and she turned around and began to stir something on the stove with all her might.

Next day I had to go down to Eastbourne and I asked Nellie to go but she shook her head. I asked the sheriff if he had a picture of that convict. He pulled one out. It was the very feller I had seen and there was a reward offered for him —a thousand dollars.

Next day I told Nellie I was goin' hunting for the day, but I didn't go far and I didn't take old Pete. Right back of the house was a clump of bushes. I hid there. Pretty soon I saw Nellie come out and hang up a piece of red petticoat on a stick. It gave me a turn.

Sure enough, after a time here comes this convict bird. Nellie hugs him and old Pete begins his jumpin' act. I got out my gun and aimed it right at his back. I could shoot him or I could walk up on him capture him and claim the reward. Instead.

I put the gun down.

"What the h—ll's the use?" I said to myself. "Maybe both the poor devil'll be happier if I go away and leave 'em."

I shifted my hunting pack on my shoulders, for I was goin' a long ways. I was goin' to Africa to hunt lions, and I wasn't takin' no yaller dog.

TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

In the days that followed, Gonfala was a creature of violent contradictions. One moment she was all womanly compassion and sweetness, the next she was a she-devil. And more and more Stanley Wood became enmeshed in the tightening net of her fascination.

If only he could escape with her, carry her away to the outer world, away from the influence of the malign Mafia and this cruel tribe, she might develop into a normal woman. If only the mighty Tarzan were here to help him, escape might be possible.

By now the Jumbi Lord had completed his fruitless survey and was hastening to join Wood, of whose fate he was ignorant. Overhead he noted a giant vulture wheeling in the sky. Wise in the ways of the jungle, Tarzan knew that nearby some creature was dying.

As he mounted a hillock, he perceived the figure of a man, fallen face downward on the ground. Nearby a big lion watched cautiously. The man stirred. He raised his head and saw the lord. Wearily, he struggled to rise. The carnivore trotted toward him.

Note to Pie Traynor: Did you know other National League clubs are setting your pace in the way of greatest of ease?....Catcher Al Todd stands a good chance to make a fast ball is coming but always shifts slightly for a curve.... Joe DiMaggio's batting streak is due to meet Babe Ruth.

Reports that Bill Terry will sacrifice Gus Mancuso in next winter's camps to build up his Giants and that old Gus (who surely rates the chance) will bob up a season or of either the Cubs sies or Phillies. Is that good old Mac Bear you hear pouring out?

At the Movies

AT THE CAPITOL

Ripped From Today's Headlines in "Legion of Terror"

A stirring indictment of the hooded legions that once more have been menacing American ideals, is found in "Legion of Terror," now playing the Capitol on No. 1.

Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill and a newcomer named Crawford Weaver comet the film's more prominent roles, and aid immeasurably in making it a thrill-filled, well-acted affair.

The story deals with two newly-appointed Postal Inspectors who set out to track down the sender of a time-bomb to a United States senator, and run across a hooded organization that is terrorising an American city. They meet a straight-forward young fellow who is loud in his condemnation of the Legion, and the girl and one of the for his life.

It is only after the young man meets death at the hands of the legion, and the girl and one of the Postal Inspectors are about to be disposed of in the same fashion, that the organization is apprehended.

The film mounts grippingly to its final dramatic fade-out. The ractertering methods of the legion, its insidious propaganda, its ghoul-dripping ceremonies—my all delightfully depicted. Cabot does an extremely fine job as one of the Postal Inspectors, and Miss Churchill, in a role that calls for genuine ability, acquits herself admirably. Weaver demonstrates definite personality and talent that promises much.

AT THE BELLE

"The Last Train From Madrid" an Epic Film

It was inevitable that the powerful drama behind the headline stories of war-torn Spain would be seized upon by Hollywood for a motion picture. Paramount not only seems the distinction of being the first but also for producing what is one of the most gripping and human stories told on the silver screen.

The story is "The Last Train From Madrid", coming to the Belle tomorrow (Thursday) and Friday matinee daily. It is one of the most important pictures of the year and if you want to see what Hollywood really can do in the way of wearing human emotions into soul-stirring entertainment you must not miss it.

The story takes ten persons, most of them strangers to each other, and throws them together in twelve thrilling hours between the time it is announced that a train will leave the war-stricken Spanish capital with carefully chosen passengers and the hour when it steams out into Valencia and safety. During those hours several of them live a life-time of emotions. The best that is in some of them is brought out and the worst in others. The dramatic clash of all of them together in the climax which hits a new high in thrills.

The capable cast is headed by beautiful Dorothy Lamour, Gilbert Roland and Anthony Quinn. The latter is an officer in the army of revolution to get a pass for the train for his sweetheart, Miss Lamour, and his pal Roland. Quinn is unable to leave Madrid. It soon becomes apparent that Miss Lamour and Roland are old lovers. Loyally to both, forces Quinn to let them go, determining to permit Miss Lamour to choose the man of her choice later. With the government fat forces seeking Roland it later becomes necessary for Quinn to hold up his commander and keep him prisoner in order that the train be permitted to leave.

Also on the train is Karen Morley, an adventuress who, despite the peril that surrounds her, continues to play her high game. The cast also includes Lew Ayres, Olympe Bradna, Robert Cummings, Helen Mack, Lionel Atwell and many others. Much credit is due to Director Jacan Hogan for the way in which he has blended drama, pathos, and some comedy to this powerfully told romance.

"Good Old Soak" Gripping

Gripping and human, studded with laughs is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Good Old Soak" featuring Wallace Beery, and announced as the big feature attraction on the same program. Outstanding in support of Beery are Una Merkel in another of her down to earth comedy roles, Dale Linden, Judith Barrett, who sings and dances, Betty Furness, Ted Healey and Janet Beecher. "Good Old Soak" is a charming story, laughable, frolicsome and above all, really entertaining.

Marx Bros. Leaving

The uproarious antics of the zany Marx Brothers, Groucho, Harpo, and Chico...together with the admirable supporting work of Margaret Dumont, Esther Muir and Maureen O'Sullivan, Allan Jones, others, and the excellent direction of Sam Wood, combine to make "A Day at the Races" a hilarious, frantic epic now in its fourth and final day at the Belle. The laugh hit of the year.

A very interesting newsreel, and "Awkward Pups" probably the funniest and cutest color cartoon of the year, combine to make a program of delightful entertainment that must be seen.

"Clarence"

Beth Tarkington's "Clarence," the comedy of a family in which there is too much love, comes to the Capitol theatre today as bill No. 2, with a cast of top comedians headed by Roscoe Karns.

Everybody's in love in "Clarence" —with the wrong person. Eleanore Whitney, the daughter in the baily Wheeler family is in love with the old codger old enough to be her father, Her brother, Johnny Downs, is in love with the girl's governess. The butler is in love with the maid and the maid is in love with Johnny. Eugene Pallette is in love with his wife, but she doesn't believe him.

It is up to Roscoe, man-of-all-work in the Wheeler household, to straighten out this mess. It's a little different from fixing leaky room fixtures and coaxing hot water furnaces to work. A good all man-of-all-work balks at nothing. He straightens out the mess and with the beauty over whom Roscoe's boy was quarreling.

"Clarence" was written originally for the stage by Tarkington. So great was its success in New York and on the road that it was made into a silent motion picture in 1919. The present production is the first in which the famous comedy appears as a sound picture.

EAST HILL TEAMS ARE VICTORIOUS

Both Girls And Boys Win in Playground Contests

The East Belleville play-ground ballsters gained sweet revenge yesterday by taking two games from their West Hill rivals when the East Hill midget boys won 7 to 4, while the East Hill girls triumphed over the West Hill by the one-sided score of 26 to 5 at softball.

In the girls' game, played on the East Belleville playgrounds diamond, the winners scored nine runs in the first inning and scored in every other subsequent inning to win 26 to 5. The West Hill team used two pitchers Dot Hoss and Dorothy Arnott in their futile attempts to stem the tide of battle. Lois Bankier pitched for the East Hill and coasted in to victory. The consistant hitting on N. Maker, E. Allison, B. Feeney and D. Lasenby gave East Hill the game.

Schneider led the West Hill at bat. Batteries—East Belleville—N. Maker, L. Bankier, E. Allison, M. Donovan, B. Feeney, S. Tapp, M. Sherry and D. Lasenby. West Belleville—E. Reid, R. Smith, D. Ross, B. Green, K. Meagher, D. Sherry and D. Schneider, K. Sprung.

A. Gilbert and A. Bennett.

Score by innings

West 1 2 0 0 2 1 0 — 6 runs

East 9 6 5 2 1 2 1 — 26 runs.

A four run splurge in the initial frame proved sufficient for the East Hill Midget boys to win 7-4 over their West Hill rivals on the latter's diamond at Maple Grove, hurling for the winners, hooked up in a pitchers' duel with B. Hall, the West Hill ace roundsman, and triumphed after five torrid innings of ball. The West Hill gang was held to two runs in the third frame, but rallied for three more in their final turn at the bat, but could not knot the count. Deverick and Deniks waisted potent bats for the winners, the former getting base every time at bat. Greatrix and Hall proved the better hitters for the losing West Hill nine.

The line-ups—West — Greatrix, Meagher, Marsh, R. Hall, Sheppard, Rogers, B. Hall, Woodley and Adams. East—Deniks, Locke, Mills, McIntyre, Schneider, Carson, Hunton, Deverick Jenkins and Evans.

Score by innings

East—4 1 0 2 0 0 0 — 7 runs.

West—0 0 2 0 0 2 0 — 4 runs.

RANGER ASSURED OF WIN AND AMERICA'S CUP

At End of Second Leg Ranger Leads Endeavour Three Quarters of a Mile

Possible U.S. Yacht May Break Record For 30 Mile Course

SOPWITH RECALLED

Endeavour Had to Recross Line at Start Beating Gun

(By Tom Horgan)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)
Aboard Coast Guard Cutter Argo, off Newport, R.I., Aug. 5.—(AP)—Harold S. Vanderbilt's Ranger leading for her fourth straight victory over T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour II, that will seal the current series for the yachting trophy, rounded the first mark in today's race over a 30-mile triangular course leading the blue-hulled British sloop by three-quarters of a mile.

Ranger fled around the mark at approximately 2:45:56 p.m. E.D.T. and set off on the concluding 15-mile broad reach for home on a course north by west one-half-west.

Endeavour rounded the mark at approximately 2:58:26.

Sprits Start

Taking advantage of a premature start by his rival T. O. M. Sopwith, Harold S. Vanderbilt brought his America's Cup Defender Ranger across the first mark today's 30-mile triangular course at 1:57:56 p.m. E.D.T. to lead Sopwith's Endeavour II by more than half a mile and set a new record for a 15-mile windward leg.

Unofficial timing gave the white-hulled American challenger 32 yesterday set a new mark for a 15-mile beat to windward, her second record by a margin of 32 seconds. Her elapsed time for the 10-mile beat was one hour, 17 minutes, 56 seconds and completed the former record of 1:1:19 set by Sopwith's Endeavour in her second race over Rainbow, also skippered by Vanderbilt, in 1934.

Trailing Four Minutes

Endeavour II turned the mark at 2:01:52, trailing by four minutes and five seconds, as Ranger appeared headed for her fourth straight triumph that will end the current series for the "Old Mug".

Ranger set her big double-sheeted Genoa, 19b and retained her staysail as she began the second leg, a ten-mile broad reach east by south. Endeavour also displaced her quadri-lateral with a big Genoa.

Ranger May Break Record.

Endeavour set all three bonnets her Genoa as Ranger continued to draw away.

At 2:32 p.m. Ranger had negotiated a shade more than six miles of the second leg indicating she should break the triangular course record by equalling the yacht's 1934 time, a little change in the relative position of the contenders.

The record for a 30-mile triangular course was set at three hours, nine minutes, one second by Endeavour I on Sept. 18, 1933, in her second victory over Rainbow.

After the race Vanderbilt won four straight with the defender still to go if he crosses the line first again today. But only will have completed three defences of the cup, but won three consecutive races.

Olin Stephens, young co-designer of the defender who has spelled Vanderbilt at the wheel, was at the helm during the second leg, with his brother Rod, a noted yachtsman in his own right, supervising - Ranger's headsails.

SEVENTEEN HURT AS HOIST CAGE DROPS 400 FEET

One Not Expected to Live and Others Are Critical

'AWFUL MESS'

Ten Minutes Before Injured Taken From the Shaft

Princeton, B.C., Aug. 5.—(CP)—Princeton Hospital today treated seventeen miners injured when a cage dropped 400 feet to the bottom of its shaft yesterday. One man was not expected to live.

The accident was described by one miner as "an awful mess". Two men suffered broken backs when the cage, taking the men out of the mine at the end of the shift, crashed down the shaft. Princeton is 125 miles east of Vancouver.

Mike Ovetkovich of Princeton, considered to be fatally injured, Harold Hart of Anyox, B.C., was expected to recover although his injuries are severe.

It was 10 minutes after the cage fell before the rescue squads, assisted by Tim Sutherland, mine safety engineer, extricated Hart and Archie Malcolm of Anyox, who suffered a compound fracture of the left leg, said.

The rescue crew, equipped with metal helmets, entered the shaft bottom from the lowest level. The dead and injured were carried out on hastily constructed stretchers. Stretchers were lifted into the hoisting cage and the cage of a "work" train which carried the injured men 12 miles to Princeton.

All available trucks in Princeton were called to take the less seriously injured to the local hospital here. Two ambulances—one brought from nearby Blakeburn where forty-five men were killed in a coal-mine blast seven years ago—took the serious cases.

CHARGE RESCUE STORY MADE UP TO EXTORT MONEY

Brown and White Scarf Once Last By Amelia Earhart Used

SAILOR'S STORY

Story of Rescue By Arms Running Ship Discredited By Husband

New York, Aug. 5 (AP)—A brown and white scarf once worn by Amelia Earhart was not evidence enough for George Palmer Putnam that his wife was still alive, "saved by an arms running vessel from a little island near Fiji", he said today.

Consequently Wilbur Rothar, a Bronx janitor, was in the Tombs on a charge of attempted extortion, Acting District Attorney Harold W. Hastings said he has a signed confession, obtained by Rhea Whitley, agent in charge of the Bureau of Investigation, that Rothar invented the story in an effort to get $2,000 from Putnam.

The scarf found in Rothar's hands three years ago at Roosevelt Field as Rothar watched with Earhart land a plane, the janitor kept it for a souvenir.

Possession of the scarf led Hastings says, to fabrication of a fictitious story that Miss Earhart, while Rothar said he was running arms to Spain, discovered a wrecked plane, the body of a man with a bullet hole in it, and a woman who was "out of her mind and badly injured".

Wanted $2,000.00.

Rothar, using the name of "Johnson", told Putnam that a Chinese junk picked them up, and that during the voyage to Panama, where the latter discovered from newspaper pictures she was Miss Earhart. He claimed he was elected by the crew to contact Putnam to say "if we can't get her off our hands" without being connected with the fact that he is arms running activities. He wanted $20,000.

Payment of the money was scheduled for Tuesday. Rothar returned that day, accepted $1,000 in cash, and was arrested as he was in a bank to get a cheque for the rest.

Rothar, 42-year-old former sailor, will be arraigned in Felony Court today, pending action of a New York County Grand Jury.

Nippon Seeks Dominance In Five - Province Area North of Yellow River

Japanese Consul Warns Foreigners of Dangers in That Section

DIPLOMATS INFORMED

Central Chinese Armies Mostly South of River

Nanking, China, Aug. 6 (Friday)—(AP)—Official foreign circles in the central Chinese capital heard today that the Japanese army had informed diplomats at Tientsin that Sino-Japanese hostilities would be pushed to the banks of the Yellow River.

(North of the Yellow River lies the five-province territory in which Japan desires a dominant economic influence: Hopeh, Charar, Shanai, most of Suiyuan, and the northern third of Shantung. Most of the Chinese central government's troops presumably are still south of the river. Most of the fighting so far has been in Hopeh.)

The information received here said the Japanese consul at Tientsin, at the instance of the Japanese army, had told the senior foreign consul yesterday:

"Continued concentration of Chinese troops south of the Yellow River means hostilities in that region.

"Therefore the Japanese military suggests that foreigners in that area be warned accordingly."

Paris, Aug. 5 (CP-Havas)—The Soviet Union is playing an important role in the current Sino-Japanese conflict in North China two French commentators declared today.

Major Rigo correspondent of Paris-Midi said Marshal Vassily Blucher, commander-in-chief of the Soviet Far East armies, had entered with representatives of General Chiang Kai-shek, head of China, (Tyga), capital of the pro-Soviet Mongolian People Republic.

Andre Pierre in L'Oeuvre said that for more than a year the Soviet government and the Kuomintern had been working for a Chinese united front against Japan. Russia was armed for his authoritative views on Asian affairs.

Marshal Blucher has been absent from his post for some time on a mission to the Mongolian Republic, Paris-Midi's correspondent said.

He arrived in Ulan-Bator by plane July 31, charged with concluding a treaty with Nanking which would "crush China with Russian arms", the Paris correspondent declared.

The newspaper said the Japanese control in the Communist University of Oriental Workers had been given to a Japanese communist in the North China army.

AUTOPSY SHOWS CRIMINAL ASSAULT IN GIRL'S DEATH

Ethel Hedderwick, 13, Struck With Blunt Instrument

SKULL FRACTURED

Renfrew Girl Had Gone to Field to Pick Choke Cherries

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 5 (CP)—Ethel Hedderwick, pretty 13-year-old Renfrew girl was criminally assaulted and beaten to death with a blunt instrument, an autopsy performed today on her body by Dr. R. H. Franklin, medical expert from the Ontario Attorney-General's Department, showed.

"Her skull was fractured and there were numerous abrasions on the body and she was criminally assaulted," Dr. Franklin said. He declined to give further details of his findings.

The girl was found dead Tuesday in a field where she had gone to pick choke cherries by a search party organized when she failed to return to her home. Rumors flew about the town an arrest had been made and police denied anyone was in custody. It was learned one person had been questioned. (See also page 10.)

BABY IS DROWNED MOTHER SUICIDES

No Inquest to Be Held in Double Deaths Says Coroner

Toronto, Aug. 5 (CP)—Unless police uncearth further information in which they called the murder and suicide of a Toronto mother and her child, no inquest will be held, Dr. Leslie Lawson, chief coroner, said today.

The body of Mary Trant, 24, was found hanging from a doorway of her home by her husband Patrick Trant as he returned from work late yesterday. In a bathtub was the body of her baby daughter Mary Torrance. He had been drowned.

According to police, Mrs. Trant had first given her young son, Patrick, drowned the child and hanged herself with two knotted baby's napkins. Trant himself could give no explanation for her apparent act. He said he left her in the morning apparently cheerful; the baby playing on the floor.

Neighbors, called by the husband when he discovered the dual tragedy, said they talked with Mrs. Trant before noon and found her apparently quite rational. So quietly were the two deaths arranged, police said, that another family who live in the same house knew nothing of what had occurred.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Artificial rain! To make it rain doesn't seem above a strong appeal to man when he desires to clean a dusty earth. Drops of rain have been formed in a physics laboratory but on a very small scale. The first consideration in making rain is to make sure that there is enough water vapor in the air, remembering that one can not get blood out of a stone. Of the air that would could be produced by raising it 1,000 feet, only about an inch of rain or 40 square miles would require energy of about 100 horsepower over one hour. The cost would be something like 6,400 tons of coal for every square mile. It would be cheaper to irrigate, and not try to imitate nature.

STRIKE THREAT IS DIMINISHING

Offered Five Cents An Hour Increase By the Board

Cleveland, Aug. 5 (AP)—Threats of a strike of more than 1,000,000 U. S. railroad employees diminished today.

A five cents an hour wage increase announced in Washington brought peace between the carriers and 800,000 non-operating employees, and ratification was held only a formality.

Still confronting the railroads, however, was the vote of 350,000 members of five operating brotherhoods, authorizing a strike to enforce demands for 30 per cent raises.

Settlement of the dispute with non-operating employees brought by A. F. of L. shopmen, was announced last night by the National Mediation Board. Thirty days is authorized early this week a strike if their demands are not met.

Otto S. Beyer of the board said the plan represented an increase of between 8½ to 8% per cent. The non-operating employees, he said, include shop employees, had demanded 20 per cent increases.

PLYMOUTH PLANT DETROIT CLOSED

Workers Demand Reinstatement of Four Men Discharged

Detroit, Aug. 5 (AP) — Chrysler Corporation's Plymouth plant remained closed today pending a settlement of differences which led to fighting between rival unions yesterday in which ten men were injured and a riot call for police.

Only a few men appeared for work this morning. The gates were not opened and from a United Automobile Workers sound truck, circling the plant, came instructions for the men to return to their homes.

Conferences between representatives of the U.A.W.A. and the management, which adjourned last night was resumed today. The U.A.W.A. demanded the reinstatement of four men discharged for alleged participation in an attack yesterday on two officials of the Automotive Association of Chrysler Employees, whose claims of 200 members are disputed by the United Automobile Workers.

NAZI HANDBOOK BERATES JEWS

Teachers Urged to Stress Idea "No Mercy From God"

Berlin, Aug. 5 (AP) — German school teachers received instructions today to weave into boys' and girls' lessons the Nazi view that it's idea that "we can expect no mercy" from any "Jewish god".

Opening the fall semester, teachers found in a new anti-Jewish hand book the suggestion if they were alert they might find a chance to bring out "the truth about the Jews" in history, biology, nature study and philosophy.

The handbook was written by Fritz Pink, a Nuremberg school counsellor, and published with a foreword by Julius Streicher, Jew-baiting chief anti-Semite.

Pink declared there is a good opportunity for "conscientious" teachers to stress the subject wherever the Jewish "Ahasveh" (Jahveh) appears in history, literature or current events.

He urged them to call upon individual pupils for brief summaries of the "attributes" of the Jewish god.

BILL INTRODUCED TO LICENCE BANKS

Alberta Government Trying to Control Activities of the Banks

By J. F. SANDERSON

Edmonton, Aug. 5.—A bill to establish strict control of far-reaching proportions loomed today over the Alberta legislature which would licence banks operating in Alberta and control their lending activities.

The bill, most drastic in the two-year history of the Social Credit administration, was introduced in the legislature yesterday by Provincial Treasurer Solon Low. At the same time he announced the provincial sales tax of two per cent, which has netted $80,000 monthly since it was introduced in June, 1936 would be discontinued Sept. 1.

The principal object of the banking bill was to bring bankers under provincial license and subject them to the control and regulation of the Provincial Credit Commission, a board established under the Alberta Social Credit Act but never appointed. The commission will be named within a week.

100,000 Cars A Week Level Soon to Be Reached in U.S.

New Models to Show Little Change in Their Design

HIGHER PRICES SEEN

Detroit, Aug. 5 (AP)—Output volume of the motorcar industry should move sharply upward next week, with the resumption of operations by the Ford Motor Company. Closed for three weeks that large producer plans 6,000 cars per day scheduled for the time being.

Unless another major producer closes down soon the 100,000-a-week level may be reached again before new model work starts. Units of the Chrysler and General Motors groups have reported heavy backlogs of orders still barring unexpected developments their suspension, when they do come, probably will be of short duration.

This conjecture fits in well with the gossip in automobile circles that new model changes are likely to be of minor consequence, and a growing in view of the continued heavy new car demand.

Talk of new models in automobile circles invariably includes concentration on increased price levels. In most sources, price increases are said to be inevitable.

MUSIC FESTIVAL SURVIVES FIRE

Llangollen, Wales (CP)—Flames which clouded when flames became visible during a concert at the National Eisteddfod, the Welsh festival of music, poetry and dancing, continued today despite a fire which last night destroyed the Llangollen power station and plunged the town into darkness.

The evening concert had just concluded when flames became visible from the mountains overlooking the town. Many of the festival participants, including the chorus, temporarily feared lack of lighting for the festival pavilion would affect the programme.

Wires were ripped up from the Monsanto of Londonderry's nearby residence, however, and lighting restored. Meanwhile, repair work was being oil lamps and candles, adding to the difficulties of nearly 10,000 visitors who are crowding nearby and into the district.

The festival is being held on Lord Londonderry's Welsh estate.

90-Yr.-Old Gardener Raises 44 Potatoes in Single Hill

Edward Greenfield, ninety-one year old gardener living on the Picton-Cherry Valley road has apparently forgotten some of the tricks of the garden-raising business, last week Mr. Greenfield dug a hill of potatoes which netted him forty-four jubers. Others averaged from eighteen and twenty potatoes to the hill. He planted and cared for the prize potatoes himself.

HOLD SERVICES AT 2 CEMETERIES

Decoration Day on Sunday Under Auspices of Veterans

Final arrangements have been completed for the holding on Sunday of Decoration Day Services at the two local cemeteries where repose the bodies of war veterans by the committee of the United Veterans of Belleville.

All veterans of the city and district are invited to "fall in" at the Belleville Armouries at two o'clock Sunday afternoon. From the armouries Albert College grounds will be undertaken. Transportation for the location will then be made through the various streets as expected to the graves of veterans and citizens to the cemeteries.

Services at the graveside of the veterans will be in charge of the Belleville Ministerial Association. The general public is also invited to participate in the day's services. Donations of flowers by citizens will be called for by the local veterans' organization, on Saturday afternoon, on receipt of a phone call at the Memorial Hall, or may be left at the hall by donors. Donations of cars for the transportation of the veterans will also be thankfully appreciated.

NO INQUEST IN HENNING'S DEATH

Court of Enquiry Will Be Held By Airport Officials

There will be no inquest into the death of Flying Officer J. L. Henning, who was drowned when the seaplane he was piloting nosedived into the Bay of Quinte yesterday, stated Chief Coroner Dr. J. J. Robertson to the Ontario-Intelligencer early today.

"An inquest in this matter is unnecessary, as the government officials will conduct a thorough investigation and provide a much more detailed report on the accident than personal would at the inquest. Our department did investigate the matter and I examined the deceased man. He died from drowning as his lungs were filled with water, but there was no evidence of injuries, possibly received, having been instrumental in his death. It was a straight case of drowning and there will be no civil inquest, but a government investigation," said Dr. Robertson today.

Although no statements have been issued by the R.C.A.F. officials at Trenton, it is believed Flying Officer Henning was busy endeavoring to get his plane into the wind and make a successful landing, that he did not know that he unloosed his flying belt and was carried to a watery grave while Corporal Collins, a mechanic passenger in the plane did manage to unfasten his flying belt and miraculously escape.

Late yesterday afternoon the body of the late Flying Officer Henning was secured to the railway station in Trenton under full military escort from the personnel of the Royal Canadian Air Force and shipped to his home in Winnipeg for burial.

FRUIT DISPLAY QUITE VARIED

Home Grown Tomatoes and Yellow Corn Quite Plentiful

The fact, that harvesting operations are in full swing throughout the district did not prevent farmers from bringing in and displaying another fine exhibit of farm and dairy produce, fruit and vegetables at the city market this morning. Although the majority of vegetables and fruits are at the peak of production, there was scarcely any noticeable change in prices. A few commodities showed a tendency to harden slightly, but in the main prices were fairly firm.

Except for large quantities, showed no change from week-end quotations selling at fifteen cents the dozen ears. New potatoes showed a slightly higher trend with peck lots and baskets selling at twenty-five cents and bushels moving at seventy-five and eighty cents, seven quart baskets being offered at from sixty to sixty-five cents each. Cabbage, cauliflower, beets, onions radishes carrots lettuce and other staple vegetables showed no change in prices from those of the week-end.

A fine fruit display greeted early morning shoppers with many varieties being in evidence. Montmorency Cherries were fairly plentiful and were quoted at prices ranging from sixty to sixty-five cents per six quart basket. Hockleberries also showed with sixteen quart basket selling offered at $1.75. Red and white raspberries showed little change in price selling at two boxes for twenty-five cents for the reds and thirty-five cents for the whites per box. Imported peaches and Shipley plums were offered at fifty cents per quart basket. Blueberries and Missouri Currants were quoted at fifteen cents per box while blackberries selling well at twenty cents.

Yellow Apples were offered at eighty-five cents per hamper with Yellow Transparents quoted at one dollar for the quantity. Bartlett Asiatchans sold well at thirty cents per eight quart basket. Blackberries and a few boxes of strawberries selling at twenty and twenty-five cents per box respectively, rounded out a splendid fruit exhibit.

Lake trout reached new market high today selling at twenty-five cents per pound, whitefish was offered at twenty cents.

67 YEARS WED, COUPLE HONOURED

Mr. and Mrs. Courtland Fralick of East Lake Observe Day

Quietly and in the seclusion of their home at East Lake, Mr. and Mrs. Courtland Fralick observed the sixty-seventh anniversary of their wedding yesterday. This fine old Prince Edward County couple who are the parents of a second couple in their county are still very active in spite of the fact that Mr. Fralick is ninety-one years of age and his spouse eighty-eight. Both are both in good health, and still derive a great deal of pleasure from their daily tasks.

While they reside alone in their home a daughter, Mrs. Elden Scott, lives nearby who visits them daily and renders any assistance necessary. Mrs. Fralick, in her own housework, raises Chickens and cares for them herself. During the one year old head of the house is adept with the hoe,saw and axe yet and each spring plants a small family with its yearly supply of potatoes.

Mr. and Mrs. Fralick were married sixty-seven years ago at Kring's Bush, N.Y., at the home of the latter's sister. The Rev. Mr. Kennekrin, officiated. Following a year's residence in the United States they moved to Prince Edward County where they have resided ever since. They have lived in their present home for a period of thirty years and yesterday were the recipients of a host of messages from a large circle of friends throughout the district.

The elderly couple have four daughters, Mrs. Luther Leavitt, Oshawa; Mrs. Elden Scott and Mrs. George Woodward, of East Lake; Mrs. Frank Howell, Demorestville.

Three Large Fish Taken from Quinte

Two muskies weighing thirty and twenty-two pounds respectively, and a yellow pound pike is not a bad day's fishing in any man's country, at least so thinks Jack Allen, Master Floyd of Adolphustown and Edward Vaughan of Consecon who landed the three beauties in the bay of Quinte near Adolphustown this week.

Displaying their catch at Allison's Booth, on Highway No. 12, the fishermen soon attracted a large crowd. Cameras were produced and the necessary proof of the big catch taken.

Apparently this particular fishing spot is one of the best in the country for according to reports an American Trout Walton landed five muskies ranging from nineteen to thirty-one pounds here a few years ago.

Professor Cameron of Queen's University and Jack Hutchcote also landed a twelve pound beauty here a few weeks ago.

ELECTION DATE STILL INDEFINITE

No Announcement Made By Premier After Cabinet Meeting

Toronto, Aug. 5 (CP)—Date of Ontario's next general election was the subject of much speculation as ever today.

Back in Toronto after having conferred with his own Elgin constituency Liberal followers Tuesday, Premier Hepburn was expected to announce the date yesterday after cabinet meeting. But the premier said nothing.

As reporters met him when he came from the cabinet session attended by nearly every minister, Mr. Hepburn hurried along, refusing to say whether an election date had been discussed.

Both Liberal and Conservative political circles had expected an announcement and the majority of guessers named Tuesday, October 5, as the day. The Hepburn government was elected to power in a general election June 19, 1934.

KID KAR WINNER ENTERS IN RACE OF DANFORTH CLUB

Business Men's Club Draws Cream of Kid Kar Riders

"KAR" OVERHAULED

George Wilson, 131 Chatham St., winner of the Kid Kar Derby classic held here on Dominion Day under the sponsorship of the Kinsmens Club of Belleville will seek further laurels next Tuesday when he plays his annual—Kid Kar against the cream of Toronto Kid Kar drivers at the Soap Box Derby to be held in the Queen City, under the auspices of the Danforth Business Men's Club.

There is more at stake for Wilson than the defence of the title of Eastern Canadian champion, for not only will the winner of this race annex the title of Canadian Champion but he will be sent to Akron, Ohio, to represent Canada at the National Soap-Box Derby held there in the near future under the sponsorship of the General Motors Corporation and the American Legion.

The entry of Wilson in the Toronto classic by the Kinsmens Club of Belleville followed lengthy negotiations with the local club and the Toronto organization. A short time ago a telegram bring dispatches to the effect that the Toronto Danforth Business Men's Club were sponsoring a Soap Box Derby with the winner to be declared Canadian champion. The Kinsmen immediately got in touch with the Toronto Club and leader and challenged the winner of their event to a match race with the winner to be called the Canadian champion and be sent to the Akron classic.

However the fact that the local club is not affiliated with the National Soap Box organization prevented such an event taking place, and the result is that Kinsmen immediately rushed an entry for Wilson to compete in the Toronto race next Tuesday.

In the meantime the youthful Belleville winner is overhauling his machine in preparation for the great event. In realizing that ahead of him is the chance to bring further honors to the blizzard city he is busy and he is wearing no stone unturned to have his machine in the best" of condition. In all probability a number of local Kinsmen will accompany their representatives to the Toronto race.

POWER DEFINES HIS POSITION

Ottawa, Aug. 5 (CP)—Contesting the attitude of a group of ex-Imperial Munitions Board officials that the "financial responsibility" of the Canadian Government in connection with Canadian Imperial Munitions Board, Hon. C. G. Power has re-asserted the negative position he took some months ago in the House of Commons. In a statement issued last night, Mr. Power dealt with the back issue with the resolutions of the body of ex-Imperials who met recently at Brantford. Week-end, Mr. Power enumerated many benefits which the ex-Imperial enjoyed while in Canada.

For identity and purposes, men who lived in Canada prior to the war and who served in the Imperial forces were given the same privileges as former members of the Canadian army.

Additional Benefits.

The principal grievance came from former Imperials who had come to Canada since the Mr. Power indicated. Their position was that they should receive from the Canadian government the same benefits as Canadian ex-service men. The minister declared that the responsibility for these men, apart from the various forms of assistance extended in common to other citizens, lies with the home government.

"I have said, and I have no hesitation in repeating," declared the minister, "that so long as I remain minister of this department these last named should look to the home government, and not to the government of Canada for any assistance in addition to that which they receive at the present time. They now receive municipal and provincial relief in the same way as any citizen of this country."

Promised British Case.

Mr. Power continued that, at the request of many Imperial ex-soldiers he had presented their plight last year to the British ministry of pensions. These authorities had not given effect to his promptings. This was the basis on which the Canadian appeals should present their case a representation which had acted upon them also by Canadian ex-service men's organizations. The British authorities had rejected its own Department here in Ottawa, entirely independent of the Canadian pensioning authority.

ENTRIES REFUSED FROM 6 OWNERS

Three Races Declared Off And New Entries Accepted

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 5 (CP)—Supporting the stand taken by the Canadian Thoroughbred Breeders' Association, the Hamilton Jockey Club today refused entries of seven horses which raced at the two-week meeting at Queen's Park, London.

As a result of the Jockey Club's action, three races scheduled for today were declared off and new entries accepted. The races, fourth, fifth and sixth, were filled in less than half-an-hour.

The Breeders' Association decided Tuesday to fine owners who signed a petition for larger purses and then raced at London. They will not be placed in good standing until the fines are paid.

One Man Killed And Scores Injured

Peterson, N. J., Aug. 5—(AP)—At least one man was killed and two score were injured today when an explosion demolished a brick building at a brake lining manufacturing plant and shook houses for blocks around.

The one known victim was John a Loughfrey of Paterson, a workman. Several of the injured were in critical condition.

Police estimated about 175 workers were in the building when the explosion burst out the sidewalls and shot bricks high in the air. Police and firemen pulled the injured men from the wreckage.

Disease Germ Plot Charged in Spain

Fuenterrabia, Spain, Aug. 5 (AP)—Two Frenchmen charged by Spanish insurgents with plotting to spread disease germs among General Franco's troops were brought here today from Pamplona.

The men, identified as Louis Chabrat and Jean Boulennec, were held pending further investigation.

They had been sentenced to death by an insurgent court at Pamplona but official sources indicated execution of the sentence depended upon further investigation.

DRIVE STARTED TO COLLECT TAX

Dog Owners Not Paying Licences Will Be Summoned

Owners of dogs in Belleville, who have been reluctant in the purchase of their 1937 dog tax may soon find themselves in possession of police court summonses, Acting Chief Constable Arthur Hartman revealed today.

"To date we have only issued 369 dog licenses, which is far in arrears to this corresponding period of 1936, as a matter of fact we are exactly three weeks behind in the matter of collecting dog licenses," the officer added.

The week ending July 14th, 1935, saw 550 dog tazes having been collected in Belleville last year, while yesterday the 550th, for the current year was purchased. Last year there were far in access to 600 such licenses sold. An Hendon 6 of the owners of canines in Belleville was made out by police officials today and a check-up of all those owning dogs last year and not having already paid their 1937 dog tax by August 15th this week, with summonses being issued to those who are further delinquent, police warned.

No arrests were necessary in Belleville during the past 24 hours and only two transients sought sleeping quarters in the police cells which have been completely fumigated this week.

CANADIANS FRIENDLY SAYS FORMER EDITOR

"Canadians are even more friendly and courteous than our own people," commented Mr. H. R. Walker, Rochester, New York, a visitor to the city today

"Everywhere we have been on our visit to Canada, the first one we have undertaken, by the way, we have been given the utmost attention and every consideration.

"We have been specially pleased and gratified by the low charges and service given in your restaurants," declared Mr. Walker, a visitor to the office of the Daily Ontario Intelligencer today.

A retired newspaper editor and reporter, Mr. Walker and family expect to spend three months visiting various provinces in the Dominion. From Belleville they will take the road to Chaudey where they expect to visit the famed "Quints."

KENWOOD BLANKETS FOR WINNING RINK

With mixed rinks from Kingston, Peterboro, Campbellford, Stirling, Belleville and Madoc competing George Watkin of the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club skipped a rink composed of Mrs. G. Watkin lead, Fred Harper, second and Mrs. E. Robson, vice-skip into first place at the tournament held at Madoc on Wednesday afternoon. The rink led by George Watkin was high for three games won and each member of the winning rink received a Kenwood blanket. In his drive for top position Watkin defeated Whitby of Stirling, Topping of Kingston and Dr. Wyper of Madoc. Second prize in the tourney was won by W. E. Wiggins of Campbellford, third by Dr. Wyper of Madoc and fourth by "Bill" Whitby of Stirling. The tournament was a complete success with ideal weather and the greens in excellent condition.

Dafoe Not Blaming Dionne Family For Sickness of Emilie

Callander, Ont., Aug. 5—(CP)—Papa Oliva Dionne does not decide that Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe meant to blame the Dionne family for the illness of Emilie, smallest of the quintuplet, when the doctor issued a statement Monday saying she contracted throat trouble from an "outside source."

"After reading the statement in the papers I could only decide that Dr. Dafoe aimed at blaming us for the illness of Emilie," said the father of the quintuplets. He added he knew nothing of Emilie's sickness until touring told him Monday.

Commenting on the Dionne statement, Dr. Dafoe said he was certain the infection came from "someone outside" the nursery home of the children, situated just across the road from the homestead where the Dionnes and their six other children live.

After making his daily morning visit to the nursery Monday physician Emilie was able to sit on the verandah, her temperature normal. Dr. Dafoe refused to elaborate on his belief that the infection "definitely don't say one of the family"—carried the infection.

Education by One's Main Interest?

BY LISA GRENELLE

WITH SCHOOL over and college out, there is more interest at the moment in gardens, golf, fishing and traveling than in education. This applies to parents as well as children. Nevertheless, I have just heard of a college, a woman's college, that is putting into practice one of my pet theories and is having, so they claim, considerable success with it. So, of course, I must talk about it, in season or out.

Like any other system, this system, even to an ardent enthusiast like myself, has obvious weaknesses and drawbacks.

A prospective student comes to this college and says, quite frankly, that there is only one thing in the line of education that has any interest for her, and that is the "origin of matter."

The college authorities make no comment on this idea, and put up no argument. They make no attempt to force extraneous subjects down the applicant's throat: they give her no talk on "culture," or the value of general education. With unhesitating efficiency, they dig into the library for books dealing with the "origin of matter."

Meets Obstacles

The girl, delighted and enthusiastic, won off the defensive by the lack of unexpected opposition, dives into her subject with zest and hope, only to meet obstacles. For instance, how to understand the material origin of matter with no background in chemistry, zoology or physics?

Voluntarily, the student, with no comment from the authorities, marks herself down for a course in mathematics, chemistry, geology and physics. It is depressing—for she hates mathematics, chemistry sounds dull, physics difficult—but she is determined to reach her goal, to find and understand the origin of matter. In four years, the girl has absorbed a very sound background for a well-rounded education.

There is no doubt, at least in my mind, that we all work better, harder and with more application when we have a desired object in view. We strive to satisfy a strong personal curiosity.

Will It Work?

Nevertheless, the skeptic in me is a little doubtful as to whether the average will power and curiosity is strong enough to carry through on its own momentum. In other words, would the average girl's curiosity as to the origin of matter (or any other chosen subject) be strong enough and constant enough to force her to study difficult and distasteful subjects.

The college authorities say that they have found that the average student can be led, through his main interest, into acquiring a sound education. There is, they admit, a few who will give up. But they say they don't want such students in their college anyway.

Maybe they're right. What do you think? Do you think the average boy and girl has "carry-through?" And do you think that the few that aren't aren't worth bothering about anyhow?

23 YEARS SINCE

Twenty-three years ago yesterday began the most momentous strife anyone living in this generation has known or probably the most important event in the world's history from the standpoint of change. Into less than fifty-two months of struggle was thrown the whole of civilization and out of that melting pot it has not yet come into, that form civilizaton will ultimately take. Communistic dictatorship and the dictatorship of Fascism have come, each claiming its ability to endure the blast of time and to be the best form of government. On the other hand stand various other forms, the kingship with representative government and republics with responsible government by the people and for the people; these latter have endured the test of time for more than a century while the dictatorships of the Nazis and Communists have not lasted a score of years.

But more than the changes in government is the change in the attitude of the people for the world is not what it used to be in the pre-war days. Those who know no age but the post-war period do not know some of the advantages of the life of the nineties and the first decade and a half of the twentieth century. There was what the world now knows as lack of security for even in the peace years of the nineties and the years before "Armageddon" the Great War was in preparation. That is, the world was on the mouth of a volcano and knew it not. Still there was an easy going way about those years which strikes a sharp contrast with the speed-up of the last twenty years with the nervous system of man keyed to a hair-trigger touch by economic changes and upsets and by the turmoil created with man trying to master such instruments as are modifying modern life, the inventions, including the radio and the motorcar.

One thing is certain, the world cannot regain quite the same assurance of the pre-war years. When the time for steadying down comes it will be a new and perhaps a wider sense of security and peace that will breathe upon man the solace and the health-giving calm so necessary for the best of individual and of state.

Fifty-two months spent in war and nineteen years spent in trying to catch up the tangled web of the bonds of society, nineteen years trying to make a new pattern out of the knotted mass of problems left by the war, with nations acting as if they had seen no lesson in the strife and some talking war as if war were no very serious thing, and but a matter of time and the victory! But victories do not come that way. At least the 1918 one did not work out so.

Yet a greater peace may come. Let such be hoped! There may be a lurking desire somewhere for a gigantic arms tournament in which all the nations may enter the lists and be rolled pellmell in the dust but no nation thinks of biting the dust. Perhaps underneath the excitement and unrest is the feeling restraining nations and men from so acting as to cause inevitable strife. What might have caused a war in 1913 or 1914 can pass today almost without notice because all know the bitterness of cost. These signs of unrest may be signs of growth which will come not by revolution but by the orderly processes of the ballot and legislative enactments.

TIDE IN THE THAMES

The tide in the Thames River has been before the engineering experts of late and there has been consideration of the possibility of rendering the river tideless. The Montreal Gazette discussing this problem, says:

"Old Father Thames, which runs in front of London's doorstep, is a tidal river, which until quite recently has been considered an asset in that the sea's surge not only carried traffic but scoured away the refuse flung into the river by sewers. Engineering and navigation experts, however, have now reached the conclusion that the tide is a disadvantage in more ways than one. These men assert that the tide sweeps away only partially-treated sewage, which is released into the lower reaches of the river right up to the city. As regards navigation, they state that, although the tide remains useful for carrying heavy barges from point to point with no other help than the steering oar or rudder, yet this seeming advantage is outweighed by the many accidents caused to ships carrying bigger and far more valuable cargoes. Furthermore, the river is so usable only for one-quarter of the time and that only for one-way traffic. The experts' views have been accepted by some of the interests concerned and are likely to be put into practice before very long. A project to dam the river at Woolwich at a cost of £4,500,000 was laid before the House of Lords, where it had a mixed reception. Powerful interests opposed the scheme, but the debate resulted in the organization of Thames Barrage Association, which is carrying on the fight. This association and its supporters claim that the dam, when built, will provide a road and rail highway across the river, while six great locks will allow ocean-going ships to pass through. The Thames above Woolwich will then be a tideless river, on which passenger boats, relieving the congestion of the great city's traffic, will run by the clock as though on an inland lake. The water will be pure, which is another consideration. The Port of London Authority, which has supreme control from Teddington to the Nore, is approaching the project with an open mind and will hold a public inquiry at an early date. So the tidal Thames may be made tideless in due time."

JUST TO REMIND FOLKS that the Home Improvement Plan is progressing with ever increasing momentum we pause at this time to give some comparative figures showing how the plan is being received and taken advantage of in various municipalities across the Dominion. Belleville started late and proceeded slowly but the plan is taking hold now and considerable activity may be looked for when the fall season opens. Just at present there is a lull on account of the vacation season but indications are for a busy fall on home improvements under the Home Improvement Plan and with private funds, private capital having caught the contagion from the publicity given the government plan. Here are some figures taken from the official list as compiled by the national board:

Busy Fall For Belleville.

In Belleville 52 loans were made up to the end of June with a total amount of $18,451.50. It is anticipated that double that amount will be reached before snow flies in bank loans under the Home Improvement Plan and possibly a similar amount from private capital in building and improvements—a tidy sum to increase employment and prosperity in Belleville. J. O. Herity, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the Home Improvement Plan for Belleville and district, is kept busy answering enquiries from city and country residents as to the working of the plan, and with his committee expects our city will see an accelerated movement under the plan in Belleville and district.

Mining Towns Enthusiastic.

Among other cities and towns of population between 10,000 and 20,000 Niagara Falls up to the end of June had taken out 83 loans with a total of $33,244.34; and North Bay 85 loans with a total of $26,680.63.

Timmins stepped right into the picture to show the confidence and progressiveness of the mining belt and one of Canada's newest and brightest cities with 123 loans amounting to $84,068.45; while Sudbury, another outperprising northern mining centre came through with 120 loans and $73,705.18.

Stream of Dollars Atlantic to Pacific.

New Westminster, B.C., in the 10 to 20,000 population class took 156 loans totalling $45,488.93, thus showing that the optimism, confidence and progressiveness of the Canadian West matches well that of Northern Ontario.

Quebec and the Maritimes have enthusiastically taken advantage of the Home Improvement Plan in a big way and a large sum of money has been invested there in making homes more comfortable, commodious and better looking.

Montreal has absorbed over half a million dollars in Home Improvement Loans; Saint John, N.B., over one hundred thousand dollars; Ottawa $147,743.50; Toronto leading Montreal slightly with $578,618.94; Winnipeg $256,255.28; Calgary $136,829.73; Edmonton $174,286.72; Vancouver $230,487.40.

No Tax Increase.

It cannot be repeated too often that improvements made under this plan will not increase taxes on the property improved. This is the all-important question in the minds of many who do not care to add to their tax burden but would like to improve their property. Under The Home Improvement Plan any improvements made will not add to the taxes already being paid, this being provided for under an act passed at the last session of the Ontario Legislature.

VATICAN CONCORDAT CAUSES JUGOSLAVIAN CRISIS

Dr. Macek

Premier Stoyadinovich

A serious crisis has developed in Jugoslavia, land of Serbs, Croats, Slovenes and Moslems, as Roman Catholic Croat Prelsbodon and Mohammedan faculous clash over the renewal of a concordat with the Vatican. Backing the plan for a renewal of the concordat is Premier Stoyadinovich who has reputedly offered his resignation to Prince Paul, regent, because of opposition. Dr. Macek, leader of the anti-government Croatian group and himself a Roman Catholic, has opposed the plan.

Advice to the Lovelorn

by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

His Father Insists on His Staying Home and Working

Dear Miss Fairfax:

He has just graduated, and I am in my last year in high school. We weren't exactly engaged, but we often talked of marriage. Two nights ago he told me his father wanted him to work hard all this summer, so he could take over the business and his dad could retire.

He has to stay home every night and work hard, but he told my girl friend, his boy friend and me that still loves me, and I know I still love him. But his parents have put their feet down on his going out. He's obliged to work. To date we are anything to me about waiting for me, but I'm afraid he'll get tired of waiting.

Would you please answer this letter?

Urgent

If you're still in high school, you have plenty of time to wait, even if the young man didn't suggest it. Playing a waiting game won't hurt either of you. It will help clear the air of parental objections, and show you youngsters whether you are genuinely in love or if it's just another case of fascination.

The business of all three games in the three sections received prizes while winners of two games in the consolation draw with the highest scores were awarded prizes. The visiting rinks were from Napanee, Smith, Ellington with 43 plus -two and J. Marshall and Miss Thurston of Napanee with three wins.

The high score for one win was taken by Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Cocks of Kingston with a score of 48.

He's in the Navy Now

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a high school graduate this year, and my fiance has just received an Annapolis appointment. He comes from a well family, not much money but very cultured, and he's two years older than I am.

I don't object to sex, but there is the question of the long wait before we graduate. And he says he does not want to bind me to a promise that will keep me from having a good time during the best years of my youth.

I am willing to be "bound," and only hope he will give me a ring.

Celia.

If you have been reading the papers lately, as I advise all my correspondents to do, you will have read about the mess an Annapolis cadet got into by marrying while he was still at the Naval Academy.

It will be four years at least before you and this young man can marry, and I think it very unfair of him not to tie you up with an engagement, when the marriage is so far in the future. A ring is only a symbol, and if you two are really in love you will not need the printing business, where he helps symbol to make you wait for him.

Fussy Objections Make Her Pick On Him

Dear Miss Fairfax:

He is 22, and I am 20. We've been going together for three years, and I have had no peace either from he family or mine since we've declared our love. My mother tells me, if I should marry him, I'll never get anything because he won't work, and we have many arguments over this.

He isn't a steady job, but works wherever he can find it. He often comes home from a job in the printing business, where he helps symbol to make you wait for him.

The church was beautifully decorated with summer flowers and ferns. The wedding music was played by Mrs. Arthur Alexander, A.T.C.M., and during the signing of the register, Mrs. Verna Waldron, cousin of the bride, sang "Because".

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was charming in a graceful gown of white chiffon, the flowing skirt forming a slight train; the brief jacket with unusual horizontal pleating and demure ruffled sleeves. She wore a halo hat of white tulle with garland of white forget-me-nots and carried a shower bouquet of Imperial roses and orange blossoms. The bride's only ornament was an old gold brooch belonging to her grandmother.

The men of the party spent the afternoon fishing in the nearby lake while the ladies, as two-thirty were called to order by the President and had the regular program planned for the July meeting.

The first item of business was the reading of an invitation from the Secretary of the Quinte Branch to meet with them on August 10th at the home of Mrs. John Donaldson. This was accepted and two members were to be supplied for their program.

The topic paper was prepared and given by Mrs. Bruce Sherman. It dealt with foods, canning, care and storage. Mrs. G. Walker read a paper on the same subject.

Health Also Stylish for Pretty Face

By HELEN FOLLETT

DUE CREDIT must be given to cosmetics for improvement in the appearance of women. Toilette-table "goodies" have helped to keep faces clean as well as attractive. But every smart woman should realize that she can't build health without health. To be under the normal state means that the complexion is out of form, eyes listless and disposition fearful.

There's ground work to be done. The circulation must be good, digestion in perfect order and elimination active. The body must have building materials and wastes must be cleared of.

Play with your cosmetics all you and you're got to be in the style parade.

like, pretty one; it is a pleasant way of passing the time. But don't forget, that health is fashionable.

Jane Eyran

A healthful routine keeps her fit.

After the age of 30, activities should slow up. If you are at the mid-channel period, don't let anybody persuade you to take violent exercise. . . it may strain the heart.

Up to old age, the brisk, daily walk can be a part of the day's beauty routine. Swimming is all right, Golf will do if the heart is strong. Any outdoor sport that brings a sense of exhaustion and fatigue is only for the strong, young person.

"Pepper-and-salt hair does not lack charm, as some women believe. We always hear the same old cry: 'If it would only stay dark or get white.' Yet, the mixture carries charming lights and shadows and tones.

If you are one of these, do not. I beg you, attempt to dye your hair. The two shades will not be the same color. Only the expert knows how to handle such conditions.

"I have suffered from terrible constipation since the birth of my first child. I tried everything. Very reluctantly, I tried your ALL-BRAN with no faith in it at all.

"Much to my surprise, I have not had to take any medicine since starting to use ALL-BRAN."—Mrs. Boyd Eyre King (Address on request).

Common constipation is usually due to meals low in "bulk." Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies this needed "bulk."

Within the body, this cereal absorbs twice its weight in water, forms a soft mass, gently sponges out the system. Furnishes vitamin B to tone up the intestines, and iron for the blood.

Enjoy this food instead of taking weakening pills and drugs. Serve as a cereal, with milk or cream, or cook into recipes.

ALL-BRAN is sold by your grocer. Made and guaranteed by Kellogg in London.

THIS MUST STOP!

The appalling loss of life and frightful injuries caused by reckless driving in Ontario must stop! Motorists have been requested to be courteous on the road, but the death toll still mounts at an alarming rate. Reckless drivers must be dealt with according to their deserts, and to the laws of this Province.

A reckless driver who causes death or injury is a criminal—just as much of a criminal as a thief; for reckless driving is illegal. Cutting in, passing on hills, excessive speed, driving slowly in the centre of the road, and all the other breaches of safe driving are to cease.

RECKLESS DRIVERS BEWARE!

Ontario has an internationally famed highway patrol force but they cannot be everywhere. Most accidents occur out of sight of the police. We therefore ask with all sincerity for the co-operation of public-spirited motorists to report to this Department instances of reckless driving. It is your duty to help check this wicked slaughter—deaths that could be avoided, and the maiming and crippling of healthy men, women and children.

Here is what to do!

When you see a motorist driving in a manner dangerous to the public, take his number, make a careful note of the actual time and place and when you reach your destination write to the Motor Vehicles Branch, Department of Highways, Toronto, giving full details. We do not invite reports of minor infringements of the traffic laws; you are requested to use sound judgment. We will deal adequately with offenders.

Kiwanis Juniors Tuck Away First Game of Playoff Series By Defeating Foxboro by 5-2

"Lefty" Weeks Set Losers Back on Heels With Swell Effort

JUNIORS FIELD WELL

Locals Hit Hard in Clutches to Win Game Easily

Scattering seven singles well Keith "Lefty" Weeks hurled the Bellerilie Kiwanis juniors to victory over the Foxboro team in the first game of the South Hastings League play-offs at the Pair Grounds yesterday afternoon, as the Kiwanis kids touched Elmer Wilkins for eight hits, including two lusty extra base blows, as the locals won over a decisive 5 to 2 victory over the Foxboro squad. The second game of the series will be played at Foxboro, on Friday afternoon.

Although the ultimate result was a decided surprise to some 250 fans, Weeks was in splendid form and was only in trouble one inning of the nine played. The visitors were limited to two scratch hits after the fourth, when the Doc Blakley-led aggregation made their lone and only bid. Weeks pitched steady ball and in the early stages scattered the safeties with ease. In the fourth a single by Chuck Wilkins, a walk to Bud Wilkins and Murray's one base infield hit filled the bases in the Williams kid was left for a single, that scored the Wilkins brother, but from then on Kiwanis kids settled down to play great ball behind the stellar pitching of Weeks and rest with ease.

Control Splendid

Weeks' control was splendid as he struck out eleven and only walked one, striking out the third man in four different frames, including the ninth, when Foxboro had one aboard. Wilkins walked eight and walked one, but in his wildness was responsible for every pitch and a passed ball, both of which figured into the ultimate scoring. With a fire-ball that fairly sizzled and a fine sharp-breaking curve Weeks set the Blakley-led crew back on their heels and was undoubtedly the master of the day.

Pat Blakey's mighty triple to right in the second started the Woodley-coached Kiwanis on a crest of hitting in the fourth, as the locals scored twice in that frame and added another in the fifth, following Weeks' lead, when he rapped with a single. Two more Kiwani runs crossed the plate and in the ninth, when the locals literally bunted Wilkins and his teammates into submission with trickling infield dumps. Although Carson and Weeks were the only two to hit safely, two runs were scored as the result of some heady base-running ball. Weeks materially assisted his own cause as he drove in two runs.

One of the leading features of the day was supplied by Peacock, Foxboro second baseman, who completed a double-play unassisted as he made a fine running catch of Ronsky's fly and stepped on second to force Carson. The Kiwanis kids played hard-to-field ball throughout, none of their misplays entering into the Foxboro scoring column.

Ranger Needs Only One Win To Retain Cup

(By A. D. Mertel, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Newport, R.I., Aug. 4. (CP)—T. O. M. Sopwith nosed his blue-hulled Endeavour II out past Brendan Reef today in his last chance to retain good the challenge of the Royal Yacht Squadron for the America's Cup. A loss today would eliminate the British boat.

By the same token Harold S. Vanderbilt set sail in his white-hulled Ranger determined to make sure-straight win the New York Yacht Club's 16th defence of the trophy.

Barring a moderate blow, which may or may not develop as the day wears on, the contenders in Ranger will complete her conquest of Endeavour.

The contest yesterday, over a 25-mile windward-leeward course showed that given moderate weather conditions the wider-beamed challenger can give a good account of herself.

Lost by Four Minutes

Endeavour II lost by four minutes, 27 seconds, compared with 17-minute and 16-minute handicaps administered Monday and last Saturday.

What she could do to the defender in a real breeze of around 15 to 20 knots remains to be seen. Ranger is canvassed for the sepphy-trembed winds of Narragansett Bay in August. Endeavour II is not.

For the first two races the defender had weather made to order for Vanderbilt, the tan sky favored the British sloop. But yesterday's weather was not so much to the challenger's liking and Endeavour had trouble with the huge head sails, designed for planing in light airs.

It that Ranger was better than Endeavour II and off the wind. But the margin of her superiority was not nearly so apparent as in previous races and in addition the challenger drew light on her better off their Swedish rivals. The skippers sail a triangular course today.

CORBINS BATTLE TO OBTAIN DRAW WITH AAJMAA JRS.

Score Is 7-7 and Kids Literally Kicked Away a Victory

BAWDEN WAS WILD

Corbins Come From Behind to Tie Count on Two Occasions.

Battling to a 7-7 draw for nine full innings the Corbin Loc-Aaj-maa Club Senior Softball League semi-minal play-off game at Colman Flats last evening produced another surprise as the Aajmaa kids literally tossed aside their chances of victory. The Corbin had to come from behind and tie the count on two occasions. They were materially assisted by the errors of pitcher and commissioner displayed by the more nervous and inexperienced kids. The game will meet again on Friday night.

The Aajmaa kids welcomed the veterans Johnnie Bawden to the moundsman with a barrage of hits in the first inning, they coupled three safeties with three walks for four runs, a two-bagger and gave of wildness. Two more hits and a walk gave the kids two more runs in the fifth, which was the final tally came in the seventh on singles by Reynolds and Carson and a double by Rowbotham. Carson being caught at the plate after Reynolds' three base running. A walk Bawden's bit and two infield outs gave the Corbins two more counters in the fourth, while three infield singles and three errors in the Mansfield gave the Corbins four runs in the fifth, to knot the count. Rowbotham and Cordon Corbin's ring run and hit well throughout. The Juniors out-hit the Corbin 11 to 11 but also out-errored them two to one.

Carson is Tanked

"Lum" Carson started on the mound for the Aajmaa kids but was replaced by Harold Dracup in the seventh and fanned the band after two were out, two being walked, Dracup showed good form in the Moon and Adams, first and third basemen respectively of the Aajmaa Club supplied the sensations by making spectacular running catches of foul balls behind them. Tuttis with three singles led all batters while Hanna and Bawden counted a brace of hits each for the Corbins as well, Rowbotham and Cordon had two and single, O'Neil and Reynolds one each to be lopped as did Dracup's single.

Batting around out seven, but walked five, while Carson whiffed four and walked an equal number of batters, Bawden was in trouble lining off the mound. The evening opened with Gordon Corbin, Point Anne "Cementmen" play their second game of the league schedule at the Central Park, the "Lockmen" having the advantage of a 10-5 win over Mansfield played in the series. The Corbins are Belleville visitors tonight. Friday night. The lineups:

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 5 (AP)—So Mike Jacobs moves into the Garden?... Well, there was never any clear cut the Garden direction to do—The big money in fighting is in the heavyweights and Mike has signed all the good ones in his pocket... Max Baer, Schmeling, Louis, Carnera.... The deal make Jacobs absolute dictator of cauliflower est industry.... They'll have to call him uncle from now on.... Everybody knows exactly what will happen to Jimmy Johnston, for years Garden matchmaker.... The Garden corner predicts an early tie up between Johnston and Jacobs.

Is it against the rules for the the Yanks to hit a single any more?....Out in Chicago all they need about a run and they can't get beyond the Cubs and Yanks.... They'll have to start "hit and run" big trade cooking?....Anybody wanting to lease a couple of ball park should see Mike Jacobs.... Mike has iron and doesn't need 'em, what will just squirting the Garden bowl.

In Tommy Farr's book, Tommy Loughran is a "wonderful boy" and the cleverest and smartest fighter the Welshman has ever faced. We told you yesterday.... Mike Jacobs' big wedding last again.... The Garden deal is the answer.... Mr. James Stotter, New York beauty expert, rates boxing champs the best looking with the rod and gun sports on land and sea racing writers, third.... The baseball writers (poor mugs) were a bad last.

The Longest Winning Streak Under Yawkey Banner Put Together by Boston Red Sox

Win Ten in Row With Ex-A's Helping in the Onslaught.

CUBS' LEAD CUT

(By Sid Feder, Associated Press Sports Writer)

That big money Tom Yawkey threw into Boston Red Sox is talking again, making nervous wrecks of a lot of American League strong-arm squads.

Headed by a clouting comeback in second-baseman Doc McNair and a lot of flinging ability still in the aging but agile left arm of Bob Grove, the gold sox—last year they were the gold hose—haven't been beaten in nine starts. In their current hose stand, they have chalked up their longest winning streak under the Yawkey banner.

Big guns in this drive for the skyrocketed the Sox to a spot where they're fighting with seventh place have been four of Connie Mack's fatigued old sluggers—McNair, Jimmy Foxx and Pinky Higgins with their bats, and Grove's baffling southpaw slants.

Sure Belting Ball

McNair has been belting the ball for a .406 average in the present 10-game Boston splurge. Higgins are moving along at .382 and .359 respectively. The Red Sox have driven in 29 runs in the surge. Grove is breezing along on a perfect three-game record and has added the quartet are a couple of rookies, outfielder Odell Hale and catcher Gene Desautels, who are playing their first year with .357 average for the 10 games.

They started out the home stand by toppling the Browns in two out of three. Then they knocked the ears off the Tigers n three games and tied a fourth. At present they're working on the fifth with success. They made it three straight over the Tigers behind with a doubleheader win, 5-6 and 7-5, as Foxx belted homers Nos. 27 and 28.

Lead Now 6 Games

This twin win left them just a game back of the second-place White Sox, who learned first-hand again from the homer specialists, Foxx and Yanks, that they're on the back for a circuit clout.

Bill Dietrich went one with the bases loaded and Lou Gehrig hammered his 23rd homer a single by Monte Pearsall in the ninth frame to win the game and gave the Yanks a three-hit, 3-2 victory that put over the slipping Sox. The conquest boosted the Yanks' league lead to eight full games.

The Giants cut their National League deficit to five games back of the Cubs by nosing out the Reds in the Polo Grounds 2-1 on a ninth-inning fly ball triple by Burgess Whitehead.

The Dodgers pummelled the Pirates 10-7. The Cardinals put on a ninth-inning rally that was to top the Bees 7-6. The Tigers walloped the Athletics 11 to 3 and the Browns beat the Senators 5-3.

Boats Beat Gun And Forced to Recross the Line

Over-announcement on the part of the two sailing clubs in the first class of yesterday's Belleville Yacht Club weekly sailing race was partially entered into the final results, that saw Duke Smith's Joka, again the day's champion, win by a big margin.

In their efforts to get across the starting line as soon as the starter's gun sounded resulted in Maurice Claghorn's After Yoni and Harry Semark's Alaska having to put about and return to gain entry into the line as both craft beat the day's gun. The After You manoeuvered as close to the line as possible followed closely by the Alaska, the Smith-piloted Joka being next in order. The former boats ultimately beat the gun and were forced to turn about and recross the line, Joka crossing at a start and from that point it was a parade.

A fair southwest, off shore, breeze was in evidence, but aside from the odd fair light squalls the day was never showing their heels to the interesting event. The boats finished first in one hour, forty minutes and thirty seconds, rather slow time, Frank Baldrey, third and next and the Alaska last.

In the "C" class Mr. Bradshaw's Svoleta won over the Shrimp, sailed by a pick-up crew, while in the Shrimp class Ike Cox, Jimmy and Red Devil completed the course in the order named. In the canoe smaller craft, abandoned the race later. Following the day's racing Skipper Ernie Baldrey, chairman of the sailing committee, held a meeting in camera, regarding the plans for the forth-coming Belleville Yacht Club field and aquatic sports on Labor Day, the latter programme is being planned, one of the largest ever attempted by the local Yacht Club.

GARNER EASILY WINNER OF BOUT OVER CROWTHALL

Secured Victory in Two Falls —the Second in Five Minutes

BADMAN TACTICS

Local Boys Defeated As the Winners Show Too Much Speed.

"Red" Garner, who installed himself as a general favorite with the grunt and groan fandom of the city and district with his splendid display of wrestling in the amateur bouts held here last week again demonstrated to a small crowd why he holds the lightweight championship of Canada, at the card offered as the Arena last night. For in a swiftly moving bout, that was easily the outstanding affair of the evening ,the sorrel-topped wrestler in an exhibition of speed, agility, and the ability to extricate himself from hair-raising holds, threw "Badman" Bert Crowthall the pride of Minico, in two falls that caught the fancy and fantasy of the small gathering present.

Crowthall's questionable tactics against the clean fast moving Garner started for him the ire of the crowd. Time after time his attempts to heave the redhead head foremost out of the ring and Garner's quick recovery to regain the mastery drew the plaudits of the spectators. The first fall was productive of some clean fast wrestling in the first few minutes but as the bout progressed the boys grew known in the wind and in between flashes of some good matwork introduced practically everything in the realm of sport-manship. Dropkicks, flying tackles, pounds of any kind were mixed in a rapid sequence with the crowd yelling its approval. Garner, however, had too many tricks up his wrestling sleeve and after taking severe punishment from his beetle-browed opponent almmit him the decision in twenty-one minutes to take the first fall.

Second Fall Short

The second fall lasted exactly five minute as the sorrel-top rushed to the finish with a rush that was gogg. Some furious milling occurred with Crowthall again using his pugnacious form of attack. Garner's super-ability soon asserted itself and he secured the decision by a crow hold. Badman tactics featured the semi-final bout between Ed. Caley, a promising Belleville lightweight, and Peter Pervolarakis, of Toronto. The speed and willingness to mix it on the part of the local boy was enough to win the bout however and he suffered considerable punishment before completing his third and final fall to his swarthy opponent.

Referee Hall took the measure of Charley Thorne, another local boy, in an interesting preliminary bout.

Results—Main bout: Red Garner, Toronto 14 threw Bert Crowthall, Minico, 1&2, in two straight falls. Peter Pervolaki Greece, 146 threw Ed. Caely, Belleville, 143, two out of three falls; Ken Tinsdal, Toronto, 140 threw Charley Thorne, Belleville 143. Referee Bud Browne, Belleville. Announcer George Semark, Belleville.

TENNIS

Only two matches, both mixed doubles, were completed when the Belleville Tennis Club met the Bay of Quinte Country Club Tournament Tuesday for a regular scheduled Bay of Quinte Tennis conference tournament yesterday. The result was a draw, as each club won one game. Flgwn at Point Anne however. The highlight of the day's honors from the Stirling club, but not from the Belleville point of view was the victory of Miss Mills and Mr. Hall, who defeated Miss Sheila Burrows, Gordon Edwards, Belleville, win their match wh'n Miss Grace McCreery and Arthur Hall, Stirling, defeated their match to the Trenton pair, each match being of the three set nature.

TABLES TURNED ON GARAGEMEN

Went Down to Defeat Before Onslaught of Railwaymen

Trenton, August 5.—(Special)—Thanks were turned on Graham's softball nine winners of the first inter-league semi-final match when they went down to defeat to hard hitting C.P.R. aggregation at Bayshore Park this afternoon. The Railroaders evened the series by registering an 8-6 win, and both squads will battle on Friday evening for a final position. Brand of ball going by each team was of a play-off calibre and the large crowd present was treated to some fine moundsman dirty fielding bunts. As Skipper Woodley repeatedly called for the sacrifice play, that was engineered to perfection on every attempt. Only the homers touched Wilkins for eight solid base hits. On the day's play the better team undoubtedly won but the locals have to invade the Foxboro diamond for the next two tilts, and most anything may yet happen, but the Kiwanis are out to win.

The lion's share of yesterday's victories went to Plaxton and Weeks, the Belleville pair-aider, who liberally left-handed the Foxboro batters into submission, the lad having splendid control, a fine fast ball and a nice breaking curve. Weeks shows promise as a pitcher, he is calm, collected and lastly is willing to learn at all times, the latter trait being most essential to any successful hurler. He struck out seven Foxboro batters and only issued one free ticket while all of the scattered Foxboro hits were singles. In the fourth he field to Sager, Graham—Miller c; Gray 3b, Ashton ss, Cooper 1b, Lee 2b, Connor, cf; Derry p; Forester 2b; Anderson lf; Gervin rf; Umpires—O'Card and Lawrence.

Continue Play

Later this week Trenton and Belleville tennis team members of the Bay of Quinte league will continue their tournament for the day's play-offs. Yesterday afternoon at the Trenton courts Arthur Cole and Grace McCreary of Belleville, defeated Gordon Edwards and McCarthy of Trenton was taken by the honesters 1-6-8-1-10-8. The closing match went to the Belleville team of Shelah Burrows and Gordon Edwards, defeating Gertrude Hyde and Ted Reeves, the local pair by 6-4, 6-2. A win for Belleville will give them a leg at the Quinte team trophy and practically eliminate Trenton, Belleville will be eliminated from competition for the league silverware.

HARRY HATCH PAYS $8,000 FOR COLT

Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Aug. 5 (AP)—A strapping bay colt, owned by W. L. Nutter and H. P. Headley-Whitney, won the highest price at the annual yearling sale at Saratoga last night. The colt, by Imp. Flares mond II out of Great Gossip, was worth $9,500 to J. H. (Jock) Whitney who was buying for his Liancourtes farm in Virginia.

Three colts consigned by Brownell Combs sold for total of $17,500 and an excellent average of $3,833. A son of the latter went to the hands of the Belleville-Sargents, while the Aajmaa and Corbins return to the war Friday night.

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

The Point Anne tennis team triumphed over their Stirling rivals in a regular game of the Quinte League tournament at the Cement Village yesterday.

Oscar, the office boy, said after yesterday's America Cup race—"Pity Sopwith wouldn't add a bathtub to a dead cabin." In the first three races for the 'old mug' Vanderbilt's big white-winged Sopwith and out-sailed him at every turn, of course the English boats seem to be too heavy, but apparently the Ranger is too good, or at least Vanderbilt.

Lefty Wallace, star first baseman of the Oshawa C.O.M.L. club has left behind a wife yesterday and stepped over in Belleville while homecoming memories. If the amateurs expect the patronage they should should stop imitating the professionals and do something for the love of Garner.

We understand there is no use going down to Oshawa, at this season—there are plenty of free elusive game tickets within a few miles of Belleville right in the Bay of Quinte. Off Big Island for instance, the limit is about four three-pound bass and that's a conservative estimate, fishermen's story. Other members of the parties that dotted that part of the Bay of Quinte on the 63rd Old Bay of Quinte is returning to the Bay of Quinte as the fisherman's paradise.

The Belleville Rovers failed to win their game with the rapid passing game employed by the Oshawa "Lakers" and lost last night's C.O.L.L. tilt by the one-sided score of 32 to 8 in the Motor City. With only one field lad in the group and all four eligible for the play-offs, the only tussle left is between the Norwood Flyers and the Belleville-Trenton Rovers, to decide which will be left out of last place. President Gord Delaney returning to the Central Lacrosse League play-offs will not get under way until after the Peterborough Exhibition, to be held the last full week in August, just prior to the greater Belleville Fair.

The local lacrosse boys had a big laugh at the expense of our lacrosse - playing contemporary George "Soup" Campbell. It seems Oshawa's sport-writing scribe rushed the laurels of the box last night, drew Fire out of the net, but when he pointed he fell and lost the ball at the goal-mouth and with Fire on the way! The air was blue, or was it C.I.O. red?

If the local softball moguls do not desire trouble in the matter of abruptly terminating games on account of darkness they'll better commence all future play-off games 15 or 30 minutes sooner than last night.

SALUTE to Love

By Rachel Mack

Kate said, "Don't rave, please. And don't offer to sell Queen. She's all of 13 years old and has a weak knee. She wouldn't bring anything."

Caroline noticed. "That's true. But the unlucky part is, Kate, I don't own Queen the way you love Brown Boy. He's Mrs. Hold's and I just not to use to love her. She's always had a nasty disposition, but she's never bothered to care for anything but her cows. Brown Boy's different. He loves people."

Kate turned away. "Didn't I tell you not to rave? Well, don't. I'm going upstairs to lie down. You break the news to Grandad and show him he check. It's a pretty good price for an 8-year-old horse without a pedigree."

"Yes." Caroline said smugingly. "I remember when Grandad bought him home, Kate, and gave him to you. He was the cutest colt——"

"I know all that moment Jeff Howard was strolling home from the mess at one of the banks. Here, at least, he felt at home, for banks invariably regarded him with liking and respect. He had inquired at the bank about a certain breed of sheep he wished to stock, and the cashier, who knew his country, directed him to Thomas Hold.

Jeff now found himself driving out the Mount Hebron road, with a legitimate excuse for going that way.

In Tom Hold's barn lot he found the farmer and his 16-year-old son engaged in looking over a large brown riding horse, "I've just bought him for my boy," Mr. Hold explained. "Say, boy, horse sure, it is that horse. I can see he's no thoroughbred, but it's surprising what good guts he's got. He's gaited the size I like, too.

Will you sell?"

Jeff scrutinized the horse. That brown-bay color. The star on the forehead. The two white hind feet. Mr. Hold had had no call to sell her here. To them Hold he said hmmmm. "I'm looking for a riding horse myself. Would you consider a re-sale?"

Mr. Hold pulled at his suspender. "My boy took a fancy to that horse last night, and it wasn't for sale at the time. Yeah, Ralph's wanted Brown Boy for some time. He'd not want to sell him, I reckon."

Jeff said casually, "I could offer you a reasonable profit. What did you pay for him, Mr. Hold?"

"Like fifty," said the farmer, who was known as an honest man. "Maybe your boy'd be satisfied with about a $50 turnover instead of the horse. I'll give you four hundred for him."

Mr. Hold laughed. "Seems like that there's a horse everybody takes a set to. You, now! How'd you know he's worth that much, Brown Boy?"

Jeff grew red under his sunburn. It was a most confusing question. He had entered into the hasty sort of bargaining that would give him a reputation in the county for being an easy trader. He did not say that reason. He had been "glad to have that horse." "It's like you say, Mr. Hold," he finally answered. "A person just takes a fancy to that horse. I can see he's no thoroughbred, but it's surprising what good guts he's got. He's gaited the size I like, too.

Will you sell?"

Mr. Hold took his pipe aside and was seen to argue with him. Presently they returned and the boy said a bit sullenly, "All right. Take him. Pop says I can have the fifty bucks."

Nor did Mr. Hold himself seem entirely happy over the transaction. Watching Jeff Howard's fountain pen moving over his check book, he said uncertainly, "The lady that sold me this horse is goin' to be right put out about this. She was anxious for me an' Ralph to own him. Says she can't stand to have Brown Boy worked."

"Who wants to work him?" asked Jeff quickly and persuasively. "I guess I know how to be good to my animals. You put that check in your pocket and quit worrying, Mr. Hold. Then we can talk cheese."

Jeff Howard returned for Brown Boy that night. As he led him down the quiet road in the darkness, the horse tried to come to a stop before the home of Richdale House. Jeff was forced to jerk sharply at the halter. Kate and Caroline, sitting in the dark yard under the maples, saw the forms of horses and rider go past, yet did not recognize them.

As Kate drove in town for ice next day she went slowly past the Hold farm and looked in eagerly. There was a carrot in her pocket, ready for Brown Boy's soft nibbling lips if she should catch a glimpse of him. She did not see him, and, though she carefully preserved the carrot for her return trip, she did not see him then, either.

"Ralph's riding him," she decided with an envious sigh.

That evening Kate could not be spared to deliver the order of baked goods to Mrs. Meadows. Caroline asked directly, "Would you mind taking it over, Kate? I did it, and she hates the icing."

Kate shrugged. She did mind, but the sperit of life could no longer dance to the tune of personal feelings. She said, "Of course I'll take the stuff over, Caroline. Why not?"

Without more ado, she packed the lemon pie, chocolate cake and the two dozen beaten biscuits in pasteboard boxes and put them into the car. Just as she started to take the wheel she impulsively got out, ran upstairs and was gone for ten minutes or more. When she came down she was wearing a fresh dress and a dash of lipstick. Caroline nicely made no comment. She knew that in Kate's feelings toward Jeff Howard there was some strong portion that was neither hate nor scorn, yet what the feeling was she could not guess. Did Kate herself know?

When Kate reached her old home she drove in grimly and delivered the boxes at the back door. A Negro man politely received and paid for them. Kate asked, "Does Mr. Howard find everything to his taste?" The man assured her that everything was "mighty satisfactory."

It was not until she had turned to go that Kate saw the thing that brandished her. Approaching the driveway from the pasture was Jeff Howard, driving a horse by Brown Boy. Kate knew a log, and he was Brown Boy.

After a moment of incredulous surprise she, too, mounted the fence. "What are you doing to Brown Boy?" she asked coldly. "Where did you get him?"

Jeff Howard replied, "I bought him from Mrs. Hold yesterday. I'm taking some of the fat off him."

"Mrs. Hold!" Kate cried. "You bought him and you're making him work! Mr. Howard! I'll see Mr. Hold about this!"

Jeff replied coolly, "Hold cleared himself $50 on the deal. Seeing him'll do you no good."

Kate's breath came in angry gasps. "You devil!" she said. "You have no humiliate me! You wanted to torment me!"

Jeff was shaken by the violence of the words. "I'm sorry, if that's enough, "The horse is too fat. It's for his own good——"

But Kate was running toward the car, sobbing as she went.

When she arrived home she gave Caroline the money she had received. Caroline was glad, and her hands were shaking. "What's the matter?" Caroline demanded in alarm.

Kate said, "Jeff Howard's bought Brown Boy. He's riding him. He's torment me! He's working him! I can tell by the way he sits."

"How awful of Mr. Hold to sell him like that!" Caroline exclaimed. "Kate, Kate, you're her voice suddenly lifeless. "He couldn't refuse the big $50 profit that Jeff Howard offered him. That's human nature for you!"

Caroline speculated in distress. "How did Jeff Howard know you'd sold him to the Holds? How could it all happen so quickly?"

Kate answered, sparks flying again, "He's a carrion that feeds on my misfortunes! He smells them from a distance and swoops!"

"Ugh!" Caroline shuddered. Then common sense and justice prevailed. "I don't believe that, Kate! I think it somehow just happened. I can't believe he did it to hurt you, either. I think he wanted Brown Boy for himself."

"Yeah!"

"Dear, you that common word. Pull yourself together, Kate!"

Kate began to walk up and down the room. She said musingly, "I was counting on seeing him every time I passed the Holds'. I thought I'd take him carrots and sugar, and he'd not forget me. I thought maybe Mr. Hold would sell him back to me when things picked up for us. But that's out! Jeff Howard's bought him away from me. He's working him, Caroline!"

"Try not to mind it so, honey," Caroline begged, putting her arms around her.

CHAPTER XXV.

When Saturday came Caroline got out baking materials and spread them over the kitchen table as usual. She tried to do it unobtrusively, for she feared that Kate would cause trouble. During the past two days Jeff Howard's name had not been spoken between them and Kate had ceased to talk of Brown Boy. Yet the grim expression of Kate's tense young face did not suggest forgiveness or neighborly love.

Walking into the kitchen when Caroline was sifting flour, she looked at her accusingly. "That's not for Jeff Howard, is it?"

"Why, yes," Caroline answered. "I thought I'd make him a butterscotch pie and coconut cake, for a change in flavors. You needn't help me. Althy's going to mix the butter and sugar."

Kate said, "We'll make nothing more in this house for Jeff Howard."

"Don't be a fool." Caroline implored. "We're $23 a week from our sales to that man. He's our only regular customer."

"I don't care. I will we clear. We're through with him, Caroline! We should never have had any dealings with him. It should've been lesson enough to us when he took our horse."

"Oh, for heaven's sake, Kate! That was a most generous business deal. He held the mortgage and we couldn't pay. What could you expect Mr. Howard to do? Eat the papers?

"He needn't have crowed over us," Kate replied. "He needn't have come and sneered and rubbed his cup back. He's hated him from the first, Caroline, and he knows I return it. He got hold of poor old Brown Boy just to treat him as Hold treated me. Don't!"

"You're being melodramatic, Kate," Caroline said wearily. "But granting what you say is true, why lose up his order when we need the money to get out of it?"

"Because I won't be indebted to the one creature, Caroline. I don't believe he really wants the stuff. He takes it because it tickles his vanity to have the Meeds cooking for him. Caroline, let me tell you something! We asked me yesterday why Mr. Howard buys beaten biscuits to feed to the chickens! He said he's seen broken biscuits scattered to the chickens every time he's been over there."

"Our biscuits?" asked Caroline in blank surprise.

"Whose else? Does that look as if he's starving our ragged stock to eat it? No, I tell you! It's another of his mockeries. He's put us on his charity list, and then sit back and gloats over it. I'll not be indebted to him, Caroline! I'll never ask another favor of him as long as I live!"

Caroline saw that Kate was in earnest. She shrugged and began to put away flour and baking powder and cake pans. "All right," she said, "I'll send him word we're going out of business. But I think it's something like the poor man who said he intended to hang himself and somebody asked him what he'd do for a rope. He said he'd make it out of pride, because pride makes many hangings."

Kate might have been benefited by the farce if something had not occurred to drive it from her mind. On the living room table was an open newspaper which her grandfather had just laid down. Glancing through it idly and starting to dust the room, she came on the announcement of Eve Merrill's engagement to Morgan Prentiss. The wedding would be in October. Kate had expected this to happen, yet it was shocking to come upon it in cold black print. The news was already a day old.

That evening at supper she was conscious of tender solicitation on the part of Caroline and Althy's beau. She said, "For goodness sake, stop watching me with soft-pedal eyes! I'm bearing up very nicely, thank you. I was expecting it. Only I thought they'd stop and not bother with a formal engagement."

"You would have to have a big wedding," Caroline said with a shade of bitterness. Her heart was near with resentment, for Kate's sake. Granted that Kate had ceased to love Morgan, as she claimed she had, had he not caused her love to die through his neglect? And there was the way the affair would look to others. Caroline writhed at the thought of it. Kate in the role of the jilted girl.

Major Meed poured skimmed milk over a baked apple and remarked with admirable philosophy, "You'll find yourself better off without him, Kate. Just the way I find myself better off without Hyacinth's cream. Too rich a mixture."

Kate laughed and the tension was relieved. "I suppose the lowly must be among me," she said. "I believe I'll go to church, tomorrow. Looking my best, wearing a perfectly pleasant expression."

"That's the spirit," said her grandfather. "Take one of your other beaus with you."

Kate and Caroline exchanged amused glances. It was one of Major Meed's fond and gallant illusions that countless young men were in love with his granddaughters, ready to kneel at the crook of a finger.

x x x

Yet Kate did have an escort next day. She encountered Johnnie Baird coming from the postoffice and carelessly invited him to accompany her.

"Don't care if I do," Johnnie decided. "Haven't been to church since Easter. By the way, do I look all right?"

"You look fine," Kate told him. "But let's not be late."

DR. E. R. FRANKISH CALLED ON CASE

Medical Expert Will Perform Autopsy on Girl Found Dead

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 5 (CP)—As police pushed forward their investigation into the mystery surrounding the death of Ethel Hedderwick, Dr. E R. Frankish, Ontario medico-legal expert, arrived in Renfrew tonight to perform an autopsy on the body of the 13-year-old girl.

Dr. Frankish will also examine a stone discovered a few feet from where the Renfrew child was found Tuesday in a field near Carswell's hill where she had gone to pick choke cherries. The left side of her head was bashed in, her jaw was broken and there was an abrasion on her left arm.

Whether the stone was the death weapon has not been established but it was stated, there were reddish stains on it which police thought might be human blood. Coroner J. J. McCann said last night from his examination he believed there were traces of human hair on it.

Setting out alone to pick cherries against her mother's wishes the Hedderwick child was found hours later in the field by John Combs of Renfrew, who described the experience as "terrible; I will never, forget i."

The girl was lying on her back when she was found and her left arm was drawn up over her head as though she was attempting to shield herself from an attack. Her clothing was drawn up and her undergarments were missing, it was stated.

Close by cattle and three or four young bulls were pasturing but Coroner McCann discounted the theory she had been attacked by any animals. "No animal could have inflicted those injuries and directed all the blows to the head," he said.

School Histories

History of Cedar School

Queensboro.—Previous to the erection of the present frame building in S. S. No. 4 Madoc, the pupils attended school in an old log building having a cooking roof. It was built from fresh cedar logs from which it derived its name, Cedar School. As near as can be learned it was constructed about one hundred years ago, in 1837.

The children sat on long benches which were placed around the sides of the room. An extra bench was placed in the front of these for the little ones. Near the front were two or three rough seats on which the older pupils sat when special exercises were given. The pupils received instruction in reading, writing and arithmetic, under the supervision of the awful birch rod.

Heat was furnished by means of a big box stove in the centre of the room. There was no enclosure around the school grounds at this time.

Religious services were held in the school by Rev. Mr. Childerhose, Presbyterian minister of Cooper, and Rev. Mr. Marsh, of Madoc.

The first trustees of the old log schoolhouse were, Mr. Coleman Harris and Mr. Phillip Thrower. At this time the teacher's salary amounted from $75 to $100 and the teacher boarded around, spending a week or two with each family in the section. Each family furnished a cord of wood to keep up the supply of fuel.

The first teachers in the old school were Mary Ann Barry, who was 14 when she took over the school. She held a first class certificate obtained in Belleville. Afterward she became Mrs. Wm. Kincaid and resided all her life in the section. Other teachers at the time were Wm. Kirk of Tweed and Mr. Pollock.

The first pioneer settler of this section was James Bread, who came from England in 1831. Some of the early settlers were Peter Young, Patrick Kirk (Irish), Geo. Smith, Alex McKinnon, Donald McKinnon, Frederick McKinnon (Scotch), Coleman Harris (Dutch), Mrs. Freis (Dutch), Patrick Kincaid, R. C. Ferguson, John and James McCaw, F. Trotter, Irwin Love, John Mabee, Alex Griffith, John Eagleson, Benjamin Swales, Nathan Palmer, Philip Glover and William Keene.

The present building was constructed in 1867. Mr. Coleman Harris as far as available records show. A picket fence enclosed the school grounds which was later replaced by a board fence in which the boards were lengthwise. Two posts were cut on an outward slant on top and a narrow board placed on top of this. This formed a favorite seat for the pupils and also a race track for the more daring. Even the girls made use of it this way when the speedboards hazard no broken bones.

Over the fence, east of the school was a little graveyard of two plots. This was enclosed by a picket fence.

The school at this time had no porch. Inside was a bench fastened to the wall around the classroom. The water pail was placed on this bench just inside the door and the pupils' dinner pails along it at the back of the room. The pupils sat on the side benches except at such times when public examinations were held, when the bench was reserved for the public. This examination was held each year in mid-summer. There were two rows of seats up the centre of the room with a narrow aisle between. These seats were not stationary and were moved about by the children at will, being an aid in many of their games.

Extending the full length of the front of the room was a high platform on which stood a high pupils' desk. This desk was closed in on three sides and many a culprit spent an uncomfortable half hour or so in this little prison close to the master's hand. A bench fastened to the wall served as a chair for the teacher.

A great box stove, The Rambler, furnished heat for the room. This was replaced in 1922 by a new stove. There were no pictures but the school was supplied with three or four good maps that hung between the windows on both sides of the room. In the front of the classroom were two blackboards that stood out from the wall. The original blackboards were replaced by two painted boards in the front and four smaller ones at the side walls between the windows. In 1923 two slate boards were purchased for the front of the room and in 1926 two more for the side walls.

In 1905 the school purchased twenty new seats which are in use at the present time. In 1907 a set of scales, globes, members' register, city, clock and cupboard were purchased. Up to this time the school had been without a clock. The cupboard as been used as a library since that time. The books added from year to year, until the present time are in the library.—$156.75.

In 1907 a new woodshed and porch were built. A cement well was put in at the same time. The flagpole was erected in 1909 and a new hardwood floor put in the school. The next year the present fence was built. A new cement foundation wall was put in in 1916 and the school was shingled. The old grey table which served as a desk for many years was replaced in 1920 by a modern desk costing $39 and a new swivel chair was purchased at the same time.

From time to time other improvements have been added until at the present time the school contains a sink, a thermometer, a First Aid kit and a few good pictures. Hot lunches were introduced into the school in 1927 and thus during the cold winter months the children were supplied with a warm nourishing addition to their cold lunches.

In September, 1929, music was first introduced into the school, being taught by Miss Ramsay. Since her death in 1931 the work has been successfully carried on by Mrs. Blanche Alexander of Madoc.

The following is a list of teachers at this school: Hannah Mulrooney, Hannah Eagleson, Sally Ann Cooper, John Eagleson, Mr. Brooks, Alwilda, Clark, Mr. McCoy, (No record of date of appointment could be found for above). 1870, Charles Reid; 1880, Lizzie A. NEW TAMMANY LEADER

Christopher D. Sullivan (above) new leader of Tammany Hall, will succeed the late James J. Dooling. The election of Sullivan as head man of the Wigwam is seen as a blow to adherents of Governor Whalan's mayoralty candidacy, for Sullivan's backers are all members of the following of U.S. Senator Royal S. Copeland, who opposes Whalan for the Democratic nomination for mayor of New York.

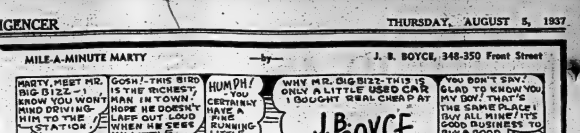
ALFRED P. SLOAN DRAWS HIGH PAY

Washington, Aug. 4.—(AP)—Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., chairman of General Motors Corporation, ranked today as the highest paid executive in 1936 among corporations reporting to the United States Securities Commission. He was paid $561,311, including a $417,181 bonus.

From available statistics, publisher William Randolph Hearst was Sloan's chief salary competitor.



The only Hearst salary listed is $500,000 from Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., but Securities officials said he may have received other pay checques from the score of other corporations that make up his newspaper, magazine, real estate and mining empire.

Among the few large corporations which do not have to report to the S.E.C. is the Ford Motor Company, because its securities are not traded on a United States Securities Exchange.

Walter P. Chrysler, another auto manufacturer, drew $300,000 from Chrysler Corporation.

General Motors' mads President W. S. Knudsen a semi-order for top honors with $507,645 and reported $333,735 for Vice-President Charles F. Kettering.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was laying on the sofa with her hands on her head, saying. Oo my, such a headake. You hear a lot of modern talk about the equal distribution of wealth, I wish somebody would do something about the equal distribution of headakes instead of the same people getting all. You have all in a practical monopoly.

Wall G, ma, hay, one time I had a book with a paper cover telling how to hipnotize people, I said. I bet I can make your headake go away by hipnotism, do you want me to try, ma? I said, and she said, There's nothing I desire less, thanks just a same.

But gosh, ma, all I have to do is wave my hands a little and think hard, I said, and ma said, It sounds like a harmless pleasure, dont let me stop you.

O, all rite, ma, just relax yourself, I said.

And I started to wave my hands in front of her, saying, Headake headake go away, your headake is going going gone.

Not so close for land sakes are you trying to put my eye out? ma said, and I said, How does it feel now, ma?

Worse, ma said, and I said, O, are you sure?

I'm positive, unfortunately, ma said. Wuz I said, Then Jimminy, ma, that proves it wuz me that cured your headake, and what you've got now is another one, so that's why you think it's the same headake only worse. If you want me to try to hypnotize this one, ma? I said.

I want you to get out of my life and out of this house and stay out till supper time, ma said.

Witch I did, staying out till about 20 minutes past supper time for good measure and getting the dickins.

Twice Times Nothing

By HAL G. EVERMES

McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service.

"Are you chunks not never going to stop that argument?" Reeser Berlin inquires.

"But Mudder is a dope." Roaring Reggie insists. "And I do not agree with him at all."

"That is because you are a woman hater," Mudder replies, "and for which crime you ought to be shot."

"Woman's place," orates Reggie, "is in the home."

"Yes," I agree. "But who can keep her there?"

"That is not the point," says Mudder. "Reggie is disgusted because I insist that Roberta, my blond jockey, is as good a rider as any boy."

"It is positively a shame," Reggie exclaims, "that girls should be allowed to ride hangtails in a race. And matched against boy hooters mounted on a good horse, they hasn't got a chance."

"I have a mind," says Mudder very serious, "to knock your block off!"

At this point it does not take a crystal gazer to predict that the argument will degenerate into a mere between a wrestling match and a duel. And there is no sense to it, either, because no two people will ever live long enough to settle such a discussion. So Bertie makes a suggestion.

"What good will it do," he points out, "for you chucks to more each other? It would take smarter people than you to prove which is better, a man or a woman. But I have an idea how you can solve the problem satisfactory, at least as far as you two are concerned."

"Deliver the dope," says Reggie.

"Well," Bertie goes on, "Mudder thinks a lady jock is as good as a boy, while you do not. So all you has to do is pick out your best hides and have Reggie mount up one of his boy hooters to race against Mudder's Roberta."

"That is an excellent idea indeed," I say. "And to make it even all around, yet the boy rids a stallion and the girl a mare. Then it will be the male sex against the female sex in every respect."

"It's a go!" yells Mudder, delighted at the idea. "I will put Roberta in the hunt on Flossie S., my fast bay filly, and there is no hide in Reggie's string what can beat that combination."

"Do not be so positive," Reggie replies. "My chestnut stallion, Arrowhead, is razor sharp, and with Kid Harry mounted on he can walk away from anything in aktra."

And that is how it is arranged. On racing day the hides ride in the post parade to their stalls at the starting gate. Flossie S. is in third position, with the blond boomer, Roberta, mounted up, and Arrowhead is right next to her in the fourth stall with Kid Harry in the lead. There are six other starters in the field but we pay no attention to them. And when the barrier goes up Flossie S. and Arrowhead are on the Bill Daly right away, shooting past the rest of the pack long before they hit the clubhouse turn.

Going around, Flossie S. is hugging the rail with Arrowhead crowding her close. On the backstretch, Roberta and Kid Harry which give them the best of it by urging them along fast while the rest of the field closes in on them. At the far turn, the whole pack is bunched together with Flossie S. and Arrowhead neck and neck but now only half a length ahead of the runners-up.

Flossie S. and Arrowhead are still in the lead and slowly drawing away from the other hicks. The stallion is now a little behind the filly but as they head toward the wire Arrowhead moves up quick until he is even with the mare again. Roberta, the girl sitting high on Flossie's withers and they are going very fast; but they cannot seem to get away from the stallion which Kid Harry is driving hard. And when they cross the wire they finish neck and neck.

"Flossie S. and her blond booier wins!" Mudder shouts like a madman.

"Arrowhead cops the nod!" yells Reggie. "Kid Harry rode him to a win!"

But then the Doobie O.goes up on the board and we see that it was a dead heat. So of course right away Mudder and Reggie go to the stewards and demand a run off after the last race. The boy and girl jockeys insist that they do not want to do it all over again, but they are forced to under the threat of a set down on the ground for a month if they do not ride the run off. Therefore, after the day's card is done, Flossie S. and Arrowhead run around the oval once more. This is also an exciting event as Roberta and Kid Harry race their mounts very well indeed. But again to our great surprise, they finish neck and neck and the judges state that it is another dead heat.

"I have no argument," says Mudder that night, "about the first three being a dead heat. But it is impossible that the run off should end in a dead heat, too."

"I agree with you," says Reggie, "but though it is impossible, just the same it did happen. And it proves that between a boy and a girl jockey, they are both just as good, and neither is be better or no worse."

"Still and all," says Mudder, "it is very peculiar indeed."

And while they are in the middle of this discussion, a bellhop brings a telegram which I open and read aloud:

"We are on our honeymoon and will be back in a week. Love to all." And it is signed by Roberta and Kid Harry.

TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

The lion voiced a low growl. It was warning, in which there was no immediate menace. Tarzan recognized it as such — knew that the beast had been attracted by curiosity and not hunger. But the man did not know. He thought surely the end had come.

Then he heard another low growl from behind him. He turned and saw, not a beast, but a bronzed, almost naked white man coming toward him. The lion paused, shook his head and snarled. But the ape-man did not pause; bravely he continued his course.

The Lord of the Jungle knew well the art of bluff and its value. Suddenly he raised his head and gave vent to the hideous warning cry of the bull ape. The lion, with a parting growl, turned and stalked away. Then Tarzan drawn down beside the stricken man.

Here, indeed was mystery. The man had no wounds. He did not appear ill. Nor was he suffering from hunger or thirst. He was not dying. In his eyes was a haunting fear, and about him trembled his lips. "Mafka! The mighty power of Mafka has got me."

AT THE ELLE

"The Last Train from Madrid" With Dorothy Lamour, Lynne Overman

The first motion picture drama to use modern war-torn Spain for its background, "The Last Train from Madrid," now on the Belle screen brings a loosely human story to the screen which is thoroughly deserving of that great overworked adjective "epic."

"The Last Train from Madrid" is a powerful and moving story of ten persons, caught in the maelstrom of a modern city under heavy bombardment when lives and destinies are suddenly thrown together by a mutual desire to escape from the stricken city on the one hand and to reach safety on the other. The last train permitted to leave Madrid for Valencia.

One of the persons permitted to leave is the beautiful patrician girl played by glamorous Dorothy Lamour. A pass has been obtained for her by her sweetheart, Anthony Quinn, a young officer. Quinn also manages to arrange for the escape of his friend, played by Gilbert Roland...only to learn that Miss Lamour and Roland are old enemy hearts and still very much in love.

The loss of a wayout Fifth columnist, Robert Cummings; a street waif played by Helen Mack; an American newspaper correspondent played by glamorous Dorothy Lamour. A pass has been obtained for her by her sweetheart, Anthony Quinn, a young officer. Quinn also manages to arrange for the escape of his friend, played by Gilbert Roland...only to learn that Miss Lamour and Roland are old enemy hearts and still very much in love.

The loss of a wayout Fifth columnist, Robert Cummings; a street waif played by Helen Mack; an American newspaper correspondent played by Lynne Overman; a famous bullfighter, portrayed by Carlos Bradley and six subordinates, played by Karen Morley are suddenly thrown together with those of the three lovers and they are forced to work and put their destinies together with a principle.

The gripping climax arrives when the train runs into a Nazi ambush and is forced to make a decision as to who will remain in Madrid and who will find safety...and the rest is up to you.

...on the last train. The manner in which this is handled forms one of the most exciting and stirring climaxes yet achieved in motion pictures. The decision is made and the last train steams out of the station...with one of the men remaining behind, about to fall to the temple of the military commander of the town to keep him from sending the signal which would halt the train and take off his rival.

Much credit is due the director James Hogan for the way in which he has blended drama, pathos and sheer comedy in this powerfully told romance.

Thrills! are blended in "Good Old Soak" the wonderful human attraction on the same program presenting, Wallace Beery in his most heartbreaking, yet humorous and presenting the year's finest fun-cast hitting a new record for fun. AT THE CAPITOL

Ripped from sensational headlines of recent months, telling one of the strangest stories ever to come from American life, is the dramatic "Legion of Terror," now playing the Capitol at the top of No. 1 Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill and Crawford Weaver, a newcomer, head the cast.

The activities of the infamous hooded legion that terrorized many communities in the mid-west provides the theme of the film, as the title may have hinted. Much sentiment is injected into the picture when the Federal Government, in the person of Postal Inspectors, go to work on the hooded folk when they attempt to send a time-bomb through the mails.

Cabot and Weaver are seen as the two Postal Inspectors assigned to the case, making his first film appearance. Cabot has lately been cast in "Fury."

"Clarence"

"Clarence," the Booth Tarkington comedy of life in the great American home, brought Roscoe Karns, Eugene Pallette, Johnny Downs, Polly Ann Young and Charles Ruggles to Belleville yesterday as hit No. 3 in an entertaining and charming comedy as everyone could wish for.

"Clarence" is the story of a recently discharged soldier, played by Karns, who is taken into Pallette's home as man-of-all-work. Pallette's wife, Ruggles, his brother-in-law with a much older man; the son, Downs, in love with Polly Ann Young, the daughter trying to shake Johnny down, and the butler provide the hilarious setting for the kind of consequences if he doesn't tick in.

Ruggles and Pallette in love with his own wife but the lady chooses to believe that the burglar hand is the work of the beautiful governess.

Hired originally to fix bath tubs, lure pianos and tend a recalcitrant hot water heater, Karns decides that the whole household is unknotting of the family's rarefied heart affairs. The he proceeds to straighten out affairs and confidence. He wins himself a beautiful bride in the process.

OSHAWA LABORS DEFEAT ROVERS BY 22 - 6 SCORE

Powerful Offensive of Winners Unleashed in Every Frame

GAME WAS QUITE CLEAN

After holding the fast Oshawa "Labors" well in check for the first half of the game, during which period the Belleville-Trenton Rovers fell before a terrific offensive, when they could not cope with the speed and lightning-like accurate passing of the Oshawa team with the result the Rovers lost last-night's Central Ontario Lacrosse fixture to the Labors by the score of 22 to 6 in the Motor City. The result of the game had no bearing on the league standings as both clubs retained their former standing of second and third, with Belleville being in the latter berth.

In the early stages of the initial period, when the Rovers were short handed owing to the lateness in the arrival of some R.C.A.F. players, the youthful Rovers held the Oshawa squad on even terms, with the score standing two-two at the nine minute mark. The fleet-footed Labors soon found a torrid stride and with the result they ran in six goals in six minutes, making the score stand at 8-2 at the end of the frame.

Oshawa flashed the red light twice as many times as did Belleville in the second quarter, when they scored six to the visitor's three. In the third period the Labors added four more goals to their speed and general passing ability to out-score the Rovers by four. In the final stanza the Rovers were fresh out of long distance artillery as the Oshawa team resorted to defensive tactics, but managed to add three.

Cooper High Marksman

Cooper, of Oshawa, was the big marksman with eight goals to his credit, while Carter, who played three-while Bovin and Oke counted a brace each. For the Rovers Lalonde scored two with Lefgry, Bunn, Clay and Gould each bagged the lone counter. Stevenson, Belleville goal, starred throughout under control.

Clarke in the Oshawa nets was sensational at times with his remarkable saves and also showed Garrison, their regular goalie. Cooper, Oke, Barron, Daniels and Boyle were the best bets for the Motor City while Belleville's goal Fox, defence, Nixon, Burden, centre Drake, Lalonde, Lefgry, Clay, cover point Subs, Tompkins, Logie, Day, Vail, Locke and Robinson.

Oshawa: Goal Clarke, defence DeGray and Garrison, centre Cowboy, Roy, Bonnes Daniels, Bovin, rover Barron, subs Cooke, Oke, Saunders, Armour, Wright, London.

Referee: Bruce Livingstone. Timekeeper by penalty box: Bert Hall, Belleville ... 3 3 1 0—6 goals
Oshawa ... 3 5 8 5—22 goals

Herman, who became blind after he retired from the ring, operates a New Orleans night club. His bride is said to have become wealthy in business. They were photographed as shown here after their marriage.

AMERICAN SCULLERS CAPTURES SINGLES TITLE AT CANADIAN HENLEY

Two mericai rowing clubs, West Side of Buffalo and Undine Barge Club of Philadelphia, romped through the fifty-fifth running of the Royal Canadian Henley at Port Dalhousie. They captured eight of the eleven championships contested in the final day of competition. Although, they failed to annex the aggregate won by Toronto Argos, they almost wrecked the equilibrium of the regatta. The big upset of the Henley was the sensational win by Joe Burk, of the Penn A. C., of Philadelphia, over each champion scullers as Johnny Coulson, Charlie Campbell, Herb Miller and Jimmy Russell, in the championship single sculls event. Burk is seen sitting right in his shell. Another outstanding race was the running of the senior 140-pound singles, which was won by Jack Flavelle, left, of Argos. He defeated the favored Louis Tank, of Wyandotte, Mich., by a full 12 lengths.

For the sixth time C. Ross 'Sandy' Somerville, of London, Ont., Hunt Club has captured Canada's amateur golf championship. Over the Ottawa Hunt Club course the veteran tournament player defeated Phil Farley, sharp-shooting Quebec champion from Montreal, 2 and 1. "Sandy" was also once holder of the United States amateur crown. In the above layout, two pictures, taken after the tournament, are shown. The photo on the left shows Somerville, with cap, being congratulated by the runner-up, Phil Farley, on his victory in the tournament. Somerville is also seen on the right, holding the cup, emblematic of the Canadian amateur golf title.

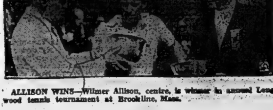
It is said to combine the advantages of lifting efficiency and speed of ordinary aeroplanes with the convenience and safety of the windmill plane.



THE GRIP THAT MAKES DIMAGGIO GREAT

This is the way that Yankee outfielder Joe DiMaggio grips his trusty bat as he waits for the pitch to come up to the plate. It must be a satisfactory grip for in addition to hitting at a sensational clip for the season second-year outfielder Joe has poked plenty of home runs over the fence at Yankee stadium this season. Note the powerful wrists of the batting ace.

HOME IN BILBAO NOT QUITE SAME

Though Quiet Reigns, Parents Are Many of Them Scattered

By GEORGE HAMBLETON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 5 (CP Cable)—Four thousand Basque children today raised a problem for Whitehall pundits.

When General Francisco Franco was besieging Bilbao the children were brought to England beneath the shelter of naval guns and established in camps. The National Joint Committee for Spanish Relief, which had the matter in hand, adopted responsibility for the arrangements. The Government merely assured protection, it said.

Now Sir Henry Chilton, British Ambassador at Hendaye on the France-Spanish border, has informed the Foreign Office that conditions in Bilbao now are sufficiently normal for the children to return home.

But many of the parents are scattered. Some have gotten in the war. Some have gone to Santander. Some cannot be traced. Thus although Bilbao is quiet again home means new difficulties for the little refugees.

MARKET COMMENT

Recent firmness in International Paper stocks was probably based on the expectation that the Recapitalization Plan will not be prevented by the Securities and Exchange Commission. On Tuesday the Company received an Order from the Securities and Exchange Commission exempting the Company from the applicable sections of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 in respect to the Common Stock issuable on conversion of the Cumulative Convertible 5 per cent. Preferred Stock provided for in the Plan and the Common Stock issuable on exercise of the Common Stock Purchase Warrants provided for in the Plan.

The Company's earnings have been contingency satisfactory and some developments have recently been adding to their holdings. Farnham Yardley has been some buying by the day to day trading crowd both here and in Wall Street. In Canada some important profits have been accumulated on the American paper group.

Strength in International Nickel and Noranda this week is believed to be in large part due to the prospect of slightly higher prices for copper. It may be remembered that these stocks vaulted their highs when shortly on the over-optimistic expectations of a support price of possibly 20 cents per pound or higher. The price actually went over 17 cents a pound but in March had begun to show signs of weakening and soon slipped down to below 14 cents. The materials industry around the 14-cent level naturally caused some gushing and cheers and in Noranda and Nickel reflected the uncertainty since it seemed possible that the price might fall even further.

During the second month, however, the price of copper has shown definite signs of strengthening and while the price of 14½ cents Friday has held at 14 cents, the Spodgin price has rifled all 14 1-3 cents. The prospects are now that the 12-cent level may be seen again as demand from many industries for copper is setting new records, exclusive of any European demand for the basis for war purposes. Thus the Secretary of the Copper and Brass Research Association in New York has predicted that the use of copper and its alloys in the automobile and many other consuming industries will set a new record high level this year. Consumption of brass pipe and copper tubing by industry as a whole has just announced is the record total of 84,000,000 pounds, and on the basis of seven months' results, the above authority predicts that 1937 sales will exceed 100,000,000 pounds.

CANADIAN TO ATTEMPT "BAT FLYING"

Canada's first "bat man", Cecil McKenzie (above), Vancouver parachute jumper, is not discouraged by the fate of the late Clem Bohn, who crashed to his death in Europe. McKenzie has built a special set of wings and plans to do spins, loops and rolls as he plunges down from 10,000 feet at the Western Canada Air Show to be held in Vancouver. Although this will be his first attempt at flying with wings he has made numerous parachute jumps since 1930. That chute he is wearing is only one of two which he will open at 3,000 feet after gliding some 7,000 feet.

● A Beardmore Operation That Is Attracting Wide Attention

Eva Lake's location, directly adjoining the Eastern Empire Mines, has taken an added significance in the flight of rich stakes on the latter's Lake Shore zone. Indeed, the entire Beardmore area is showing increasing activity.

Extra crews have been added to ever operation, both underground and at surface. The 400-foot level has now been driven in some 300 feet; shovelers on the property, diamond drilling, stripping and trenching are proceeding.

ITALY, BRITAIN TO SETTLE DIFFERENCES IN ROME

Great Britain Accepts Proposal Made by Italy For Formal Conference

Material For Conversation to Be Prepared

FRIENDSHIP LETTERS

Vansittart And Grandi Exchange Letters on Matter

Rome, Aug. 6 (AP)—The Italian government announced today Britain and Italian diplomats would meet in Rome for formal conversations to settle differences between the two countries.

Count Dino Grandi, Italian Ambassador to London, proposed the conversations to Prime Minister Chamberlain, who recently exchanged friendship letters with Premier Mussolini.

Yesterday, the government said, Sir Robb. Vansittart, permanent undersecretary of Foreign Affairs, notified Count Grandi the proposal had been accepted.

During the Grandi-Vansittart talk it was agreed the next few weeks would be dedicated to preparing material for the conversations.

CAR IS DEMOLISHED WHEN HIT BY TRAIN BUT DRIVER ESCAPES

Presence of mind in the face of an emergency saved the life of Harold Dickens, Sidney Township farmer, shortly after one o'clock this morning, when he leaped from his skidded automobile a split second before it was demolished by a speeding C.N.R. passenger train at a crossing two miles east of Trenton junction.

Dickens was uninjured. The car which was moving 200 feet was completely demolished. Dickens who was returning home from taking a party of friends to a theatre in Belleville was accompanied. The car stopped squarely on the tracks, when the motor stalled, and Dickens noting the oncoming speeding train leaped from the car.

Mrs. Morris Sickle, wife of a farmer near whose home the accident occurred, called at the scene a terrific crash. Leaning from her bed she roused her family and they investigated. Dickens stood near the wreckage uninjured and stated that he had jumped from his car just before it was struck by the train.

The train which stopped following the crash, proceeded on its way after an investigation of the accident.

Horses are Stricken By Dread Disease

Portage La Prairie, Man., Aug. 6 (CP)—Encephalomyelitis has again broken out among horses in a wide area around this town, 65 miles west of Winnipeg, veterinaries said today.

A number of deaths have already been recorded and A. B. Bydeen, Manitoba Inspector of Dairies, said he believed it is under control. It is believed large black mosquitoes helped to spread the disease in the last week.

Encephalomyelitis is a disease similar to swamp fever, according to competent local veterinary authorities. While the disease has generally been confined to the western provinces there have been isolated cases in this district but not for a good many years, it was stated.

GIRL ASSAULTED FRANKISH FINDS

Ravished Body Found in Clump of Bushes

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 6 (CP)—Pretty 13-year-old Ethel Hedderwick still lay buried today, a mystery of her death still unsolved.

Meanwhile, police meanwhile continued investigation into the death of the girl whose battered and obscene ravished body was found near a clump of bushes in a field a mile west of here Tuesday.

A post-mortem examination conducted by Dr. R. E. Franklin, Toronto medico-legal expert, disclosed the child had been criminally assaulted and died as a result.

Her skull was badly fractured, there were numerous abrasions on her body and she was strangled to death, said Dr. Franklin, who left yesterday for Toronto. He took with him the vital organs of the child's body which he said would be subjected to further laboratory examination.

A five-pound stone which police believe may have been the murder weapon was also taken to Toronto by Dr. Franklin.

CEMETERY BOARD COULD REPOSSESS SIR JOHN'S PLOT

Father of Confederation And Former Premier Buried Near Kingston

PLOT DUES UNPAID

Other Outstanding Canadians Are Buried in Same Cemetery

rectors of nearby Cataraqui Cemetery rectors of nearby Cataraqua Cemetery today issued a statement they "feel it a privilege to maintain the last resting place" there of Canada's first premier, Sir John A. Macdonald. The Cemetery company now has had any intention to repossess any part of the burial plot of the late premier although no maintenance payments have been made on it for many years.

Statement Issued.

W. F. Nichol, chairman of the Cemetery Company, issued the following statement on behalf of other directors:

"After the death of Sir John A. Macdonald, the Cemetery authorities had correspondence with representatives of his family and it was understood the necessary funds for perpetual care were not available. The then directors of the Cataraqui Cemetery Company agreed the company would accept the responsibility of national and local grounds of maintaining the lot in perpetuity. Since that time the lot has always been maintained efficiently by the company.

"There is not now nor was any intention on the part of the company of repossessing the plot or any part of it. The cemetery touches the grounds of Queen's University and the compa / feels it is a privilege to maintain the last resting place of Canada's great dead."

Toronto, Aug. 6 (CP)—Garrett Tyrrell, veteran Liberal and Conservative Association of Toronto, announced today he would accept responsibility for raising a fund to maintain the grave of Sir John A. Macdonald at Cataraqui Cemetery, Kingston, Ont.

Until he died at Winnipeg in 1923 Sir Hugh Macdonald, son of the Confederation provided for care of the grave but his will contained no provision for perpetual care. Cemetery officials have kept up the plot of the "Father of Confederation," but no maintenance fee has been paid for nine years the plot might legally be repossessed.

E. Purdy, cemetery superintendent, said under the cemetery Act any plot in which there has been no burial for twenty years and no maintenance fee has been paid for five years the cemetery may repossess it. He said Sir John's grave would be disturbed but vacant land in the plot would be sold.

Kingston, Aug. 6 (CP)—Payments for the upkeep of the plot on the grave of Sir John A. MacDonald in Cataraqui cemetery here have not been made for nine years and the plot might legally be repossessed (Continued On Page Two)

Child Delivered By Operation Minute After Mother's Death

Baby Weighs 3 1-2 Pounds And is Expected to Live

NOW IN INCUBATOR

Philadelphia, Aug. 6.—(AP)—Doctors stood beside an incubator and oxygen tent, hoping they could save the life of a 3 1-2 pound girl delivered in an operation performed one minute after the mother died.

Their first problem was to restore the baby's temperature from 90 degrees.

That was the circumstance of the birth today Mrs. Mary Boccasini, 27, at the time of her death from tuberculosis in Germantown hospital.

Five minutes before the mother's death, a nurse, stationed at the door of her room, summoned two doctors waiting in an adjoining room for the moment.

For a few minutes they stood at the bedside while nurses brought the room instruments that had been sterilized in advance.

The operation was performed in the room to save the loss of time involved in removing the baby to an operating room. Speed was imperative. Doctors said the baby would have only a few minutes.

The tiny girl was placed in an incubator beside the bed in which her mother had died. Doctors did not immediately risk removing the incubator to another room.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen Science Service Meteorologist

Do sunspots affect the weather? Sunspots come and go. Their occurrences have been studied in connection with earth conditions. There seems to be a general but not exact agreement between sunspots and temperatures. Indeed there seems to be also the radiated energy of the sun received by the earth in the major control of our weather, and sunspot vary the sun's radiated heat. But there are other factors that enter in. First, solar radiation varies independently of sunspot numbers. Second, there are variations in the dust content of the atmosphere caused by eruptions from volcanoes, which varies considerably the amount of the sun's radiation to the earth.

Soviet Russia to Buy Forty Million Dollars Products in U. S.

Washington, Aug. 6 (AP)—President Roosevelt proclaimed today a new commercial agreement with Soviet Russia by which that country agrees to purchase at least $40,000,000 in United States products during the next year.

This is an increase of $10,000,000 over the amount of goods the Soviet government obligated itself to buy in a somewhat similar agreement which expired on July 12.

In return, the United States granting unconditional most favored-nation commercial treatment to Russia for the first time.

This means it will give the benefit not only of all tariff concessions but of all other commercial privileges and advantages it accords to other countries.

The State Department said the new compact becomes effective on Aug. 4 with an exchange of notes at Moscow between Ambassador Joseph E. Davies and Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet Commisar for Foreign Affairs.

It described the agreement as "reflecting the intention of the Soviet government with respect to trade with the United States to continue its purse policies and takes actions in harmony with the purposes of the (American) Trade Agreements Act."

BRONZE MEDAL FOR BRAVE MAN

Late Martin J. O'Brien Gave His Life to Protect Woman

Mimico, Ont., Aug. 6.—(CP)—For bravery in giving his life to protect a woman neighbor attacked here 4½ years ago, Constable Martin J. O'Brien today was posthumously honored with the bronze medal.

O'Brien fell under a hail of bullets after surprising the gunman in the home of Edward Gerry, where the intruder had held up Mrs. Gerry. Four days later O'Brien died and a murder warrant was issued for an unnamed man. A reward of $1,000 was paid, but efforts to apprehend the gunman were unsuccessful.

Three New Cases of Paralysis Reported

Toronto, Aug. 6 (CP)—Three new cases of infantile paralysis were reported today by Dr. Gordon P. Jackson, Medical Officer of Health. All were in the city and one in suburban York County.

The total reported today bring this year's total to 32 to date, including 13 in Toronto and 19 in the county. During 1936 only 23 cases were reported in city and district.

Officials of city and Ontario health departments said they were relying on convalescent serum for treatment and prevention of the disease. They said there are no successful preventative serums yet developed.

Provincial department officials expressed uneasiness over the outbreak. The department is gathering more convalescent blood from Toronto donors who number 112. Next week 50 more are being asked to give a second supply of from five to six.

Chinese Forecast Japanese to Strike Deeper Into China

Peiping, Aug. 6.—(AP)—Chinese predicted today Japan would extended Japanese offensives north and south of Peiping in order to make the hub of undeclared war as soon as Japans "present preparations" are completed.

Three authoritative Chinese sources believed the Japanese would strike deeper into the south of Hopeh Province with Paotingfu, the Peiping-Hankow railroad, the Tientsin-Pukow Railroad, and the city of Tsangchow, southwestern Hopeh near the Shantung Province border, as objectives.

FIND TRANSIENT DEAD IN HOUSE

John Truman of Hamilton May Have Met Foul Play

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 6 (CP)—The body of a man found lying in the yard of a Park street house early today was identified late today as that of John Truman, a former resident of Hamilton and known to police as a transient.

Truman is believed to have met foul play.

Three learned two men were seen by taxi drivers to be carrying an unconscious form into the yard last night. The drivers paid little attention, thinking the man was intoxicated.

The yard adjoins a glass factory and when the police arrived today they saw the body and notified police.

A superficial examination showed Truman suffered a blow across the forehead, apparently from the top of the nose to the crown of the head.

The trophy, donated twenty-six years ago by Robert Collier, publisher of Collier's and himself a pioneer aviator, is awarded annually for "the greatest achievement of value which has been demonstrated in use in actual operation during the preceding year."

Beer Just Soft Drink Slyly Adds Attorney

London, Ont., Aug. 6 (CP)—George B. Jessop, K.C., looked decidedly upon beer as just another soft drink when he appeared in court today charged with drunk driving.

"I don't count beer intoxicating" he told the court. He was convicted of the charge but because of his age was given suspended sentence. Magistrate Hawthaw said he would recommend to the Department of Highways that its be refused a license indefinitely.

Charged by High Constable Ben Milligan after his truck had crashed into the parked car of Jack Hilton, Lemon gemied to the charge.

"Why, I haven't had a drink of beer for 10 years, not 10 years," he said, "it's longer than that, I guess, maybe 20 years."

"What about beer?" asked the court.

"Oh, beer," he said, "I've had the odd beer, but I wouldn't call it intoxicating."

"Just a soft drink," remarked Crown Attorney Stewart Newton.

Constable Milligan said that Jessop had failed to stop after the crash the accused told him he was a temperance man. He was the hub of undeclared war as soon as Japans "present preparations" are completed.

SAYS JAPAN IRRESPONSIBLE

London, Aug. 6.— (CP-Havas) —Japan's activity in China during the past month has only served to impress the world with her irresponsibility," the Times declared today, warning the island Empire that although it was possible to pick one's enemies, the same was not true of one's friends.

BRITISH, ITALIAN SHIPS BOMBED BY AIRPLANES

Almost Same Spot Scene of Two Attacks

ATTACKERS UNKNOWN

British Vessel Cancels Call Shortly After Sending S. O. S.

London, Aug. 6 (AP)—Lloyd's reported from Gibraltar today that an Italian and a British steamship had been bombarded by aircraft at almost the same spot off the coast of Algeria, the war-torn Spanish.

The British tanker British Corporal flashed an SOS that she was being bombed, later capsized it, and steamed into Algiers 30 miles southeast. The crew were safe and her wireless receiver, which she had reported smashed, was working.

Italian Ship Attacked.

A few hours later Lloyd's said the Italian steamship Mongio dispatched an SOS saying she was bombed from the air. The 5,113 tons, was bound from Genoa to New Orleans.

The first flash from the Corporal came from the radio station at Dungeness, Gulf to Land's End, England, and "we are being bombed . . . hurry!"

Attackers Unidentified.

In neither case was the aerial attacker identified.

Three Planes Bombard.

The British Corporal's owners were advised from Algiers that three monoplanes", nationality unstated, bombarded her for an hour. Shortly after the attack began, the gasoline-laden ship was put slightly damaged.

The monoplanes bombed the tanker from 5:30 a.m., to 6:15 a.m., dropping forty projectiles. None of them made a direct hit, but the wireless apparatus was damaged by concussion and the tanker was sprayed with shrapnel. Her captain ever tried to elude the bombers, the planes swept the decks with machine-gun fire.

Benito Mussolini's name was heard from the Italian ship for several hours.

Both Spanish government and Insurgent planes are based within striking distance of the scene of the bombings.

The Algiers report, not immediately confirmed, said the Mongiola was trying to aid the British Corporal when the Italian ship's commander, Luigi Perrin, was wounded seriously.

The pleas for assistance were picked up at Gibraltar by the agent for Lloyds, the British Underwriters, and at Marseille by French radio. The Mongiola's master said it had received no official confirmation or intimation that it was in the fringe of Spain's Civil War churned waters and did not know whether the attack was directed against it or to the vessel's assistance.

The British Corporal, Co., Ltd., owners of the British Corporal, said she was homeward bound with a full load of gasoline from the Mesopotamia oilport of Abbadan on the north side of the Persian Gulf. The 440-foot tanker is registered out of London.

Prevent Tax Avoidance, Aim of Recommendation Of U. S. Tax Committee

Effort to Plug Income Tax Leaks For $100,000,000

UNDISTRIBUTED INCOME

Treasury Officials Estimate Increase in Federal Income Revenue

Washington, Aug. 5 (AP)—A tax committee of the United States Senate and House of Representatives today recommended drastic increases in domestic personal holding company taxes as one means of preventing tax evasion.

The committee, proposing for enactment at this session a $100,000,000 eight-point program of legislation to plug income tax leaks, also recommended an immediate tax to take action of foreign personal holding companies.

The committee had heard evidence of formation of holding companies by Americans in Canada and in the West Indies).

It suggested that undistributed net income of such companies should be figured in the gross income of the American owners of the companies just as it actually had been distributed to them.

Treasury officials, who co-operated with the joint committee in making up an investigation which brought in the names of many prominent citizens, estimated roughly that enactment of the committee recommendations would mean an increase of $100,000,000 in federal revenues.

In addition to the domestic and foreign personal holding company proposals the committee recommended stiffer tax treatment for the following methods used by wealthy persons to reduce their taxes: incorporation of yachts and country estate, incorporation of personal talents (such as acting), artificial deductions for interest and business expense, multiple trusts, and certain loss, the artificial deductions for losses from sales or exchanges of property.

Reduced Tax Payments.

The committee's report to the House and Senate followed an investigation extending over several weeks into the causes of the 1937 slump in President Roosevelt. The President said in a message to congress a comparatively small number of wealthy persons were reducing their payments to the government by artificial devices.

Among many prominent Americans named in the committee hearings were stylized themselves of tax reduction methods were: William Randolph Hearst, publisher; Jacob Ruppert, New York brewer and baseball magnate; C. F. Kettering, vice-president of General oMtors; Myron C. Taylor, chairman of United States Steel Corporation; the late Alfred I. Du Pont; Ed Wynn, the radio entertainer; Philip Kerlaud, the columnist: and Percy Crosby, cartoonist.

Details of Tax

The committee proposed to lift the surtaxes on domestic personal holding corporations by 6 per cent on the undistributed net income not in excess of $20,000 and 75 per cent on the amount above $20,003. The present rates are 8 to 48 per cent.

In addition, the committee suggested that deductions allowed such companies be scaled broadly, and some revoked entirely.

The committee proposed tax laws should be revised to encourage dissolution of foreign personal holding firms "as promptly as possible."

The major recommendation here was that in the liquidation of any foreign personal holding firm not completed by the end of this year, 100 per cent of the gains from the liquidation should be taken into account in computing net income.

Under existing law it is possible for as little as 30 per cent of the gain to be taken into account in computing net income.

WOMAN IS HELD ON USURY CHARGE

Alleged to Have Obtained High Rate For Small Loans

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—(CP)—Allegations to have obtained as high as 240 per cent interest on loans ranging from $10 to $400 during the past 18 months, Mrs. Rosina Blasten, 45, chose trial by jury today when arraigned on usury charges and will appear for preliminary inquiry August 12.

Bernard Bernstand, counsel for seven firemen who brought the charges against Blasten the woman, asked permission to add to the complaint that "the accused was carrying on the business of moneylender" but Judge Jules Desmarais said the request could not be dealt with after preliminary inquiry.

ITALY LIFTS NEWSPAPER BAN

Italian Correspondents Are Authorized to Return to London

Rome, Aug. 6 (AP)—The Italian government announced today it had lifted its three-months-old ban on British correspondents.

Prominently displayed accounts of Italian defeats in Spain in the British press led to the ban. Also the recall of all Italian newspaper correspondents from London on May 8, prior to the Coronation.

The correspondents were authorized to return to London earlier this week.

Conclusion of the strained press relations between the two countries is a further indication of the easing of tension which has existed between them because of the Italian conquest of Ethiopia and the Italian support of Insurgent General Franco in Spain.

Premier Mussolini and Prime Minister Chamberlain recently exchanged personally-signed letters of good will.

The May newspaper ban excluded all but three British papers from Italy.

Injured Man Snaps Pictures As Guide Effects Rescue

Spends 41 Hours on Rocky Ledge Without Food

SUFFERS HEAD WOUND

Morley, Alta., Aug. 5.—(CP)—A cool young cowboy photographer who calmly snapped pictures of his rescuers as they came down the side of a mountain to bring him to safety from a ledge where he had been marooned nearly two days, Humphrey Cooper is back at Camp Chief Hector today more worried about his stomach than the wound in his head.

"I'm all right," he joked when he returned to camp near this Rocky Mountain town, 43 miles west of Calgary, last night following the rescue, "just a headache and some ribs. How about something to eat?"

His only injuries were a deep scalp wound and one eye, suffered when he tumbled down the side of End Mountain to land on the narrow ledge.

41 Hours Without Food

The 21-year-old youth spent 41 hours without food on a ledge four feet wide and 20 feet long before he was taken off by Victor Kotchapenko, Anstruther guide, and a rescue party. Without much water, he lay uncovered through two chilly nights, the hot sunshine of one day and half another.

The rescue party which came down the side of the mountain to aid him, Cooper told me, was a composite scene as he had been carrying and snapped several pictures.

With John Dunsmuir of Regina, an experienced Alpinist, Cooper, was attempting to climb down the face of the 1,400-foot face of End Mountain, when his hand slipped. He lost his hold, tumbled over the rocky surface, crashing 20 feet through a narrow gully to land on the small ledge.

Reckless Driving Charge is Preferred

Two hours after he was implicated in a motor accident, Thomas Drew, Belleville, appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C. in todays local police court charged with reckless driving. Drew was not asked to enter a plea as Crown Attorney R. C. Denman also did so. "This accident in question happened about midnight last night and we have not had sufficient time to fully investigate. I would suggest the case be enlarged for one week and also to permit Mr. Drew his liberty. I feel sure we will in turn then." Drew nodded his assent while the court granted the request.

Shortly before midnight last night Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Irvine investigated an accident six miles east of Belleville on highway No. 2. It is stated by the officer that Drew was driving easterly and in some manner was over the centre portion of the road when the car he was driving collided head-on with a west bound motor car driven by Morris Jenkins, Picton. Constable Irvine is to the Ontario Intelligencer following the investigations today.

Both vehicles were badly damaged during the impact, while Russell Carding, a passenger in Mr. Jenkins' car sustained several painful facial injuries.

BOY'S PROMISE KEPT BY YOUTH

He Therefore Gives up Chance of Ride in Car Which Meets Accident

A boy's promise to his mother, made when he was a small youngster and adhered to ever since, saved him from possible serious injury, it was revealed here yesterday.

Ted Clarke, sixteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Clarke, Foster Ave., promised his mother when a small boy, that he would never leave home unless he told her of his destination.

Upon his return to his home last Sunday after playing tennis, young Clarke discovered that his parents had gone for a car ride. A few minutes later two of his friends drew to the house and invited him to go on a ride. Remembering his childhood promise, Clarke declined.

Later that night, he learned that his friends, Jim Gosling, Toronto, and John Jackson, Belleville, had become involved in a serious automobile accident with the former and other passengers being seriously injured.

DRIVING CYCLE MINUS MUFFLER

"We have received several complaints from irritated citizens, especially at night, regarding motorcycles with their mufflers missing unnecessary noises, especially with the mufflers of their machines removed," declared Chief Constable Harman when Bert Pallant, Belleville aggregate motorcycle dispatrate E. J. Butler, K.C., charged with operating his motorcycle on Bridge St. East, without a muffler attached, contrary to the H.T.A. Pallant pleaded guilty and was fined two dollars and costs, amounting to $4.35 in all.

"That is nearly enough to buy a muffler, I would think," added Crown Attorney R. C. Denman, K.C.

"Yes, it is," replied Pallant as he paid his fine.

"I do not want this court to be too hard on this young man and make an example of him, but there have been so many complaints registered, that perhaps a small fine will be ample warning to others," added Chief Harman to Pallant.

"Yes, this practice should be brought to the attention of the public. Such cases have no necessary," added His Worship.

True Fable of The Young Man Who Meets Great Emergency

Once upon a time there was a Young Man.

He lived in a big city where there were many temptations.

When he was a small boy he developed an early sense of Emergency adaption.

As he grew into manhood this trait became more pronounced.

Young Man soon became the cynosure of the eyes of his family and friends.

They predicted for him a great future.

They sent him to a School of Pharmacy.

Here his sense of Emergency Adaption again asserted itself.

He was faced with a serious emergency as his exams. drew near.

He came through with flying colors.

His family and friends heaved their delight.

Wasn't it true? He was destined to become a Great Man.

Young Man graduated and entered his drug store.

Here he became a successful Young Man.

But his sense of Emergency Adaption ran the danger of becoming atrophied through want of exercise.

Surely Young Man had not lost this splendid Trait.

The Years went by. Young Man pursued his even tenor of his way. Then one day It happened.

Young Man in the seclusion of his store, received the message.

Thirty-two sandwiches and Thirty-two cups of Coffee were needed at the C.N.R. station to feed a Hungry Crowd coming on the next Train.

Young Man sprang into action. His staff rapidly prepared the food and drink.

Entering his car, laden with food, Young Man dashed to the station.

The train arrived.

Young Man here received a rude jolt. He was informed his potentialations were required to go through the several coaches.

What to do with the sandwiches. Take 'em through the train and sell them", he was told.

Young Man hesitated. Here was the Great Emergency he had been waiting for through the Years.

Young Man swallowed hard.

Back came the urge of his youth. He was dauntless.

His friends stood near fearful for Him. Was he equal to this Great Emergency?

But they did not know Young Man.

Shouldering his package of food, he threw out his chest, mounted the Train and in a fine tenor voice sang out his wares as he strods through the coaches.

In a few minutes Young Man had disposed of his stock. His pockets tingled with the money taxes.

But Young Man was not interested in money just then.

He had met the Great Emergency and conquered.

He still was possessed of his boyhood Trait.

Moral—The Great Emergency may be linked with sandwiches and coffee as well as with grandiose undertakings.

THREE FAMILIES HOLD REUNION AT FAIRFIELDS

Families Settled in Hastings Over 100 Years Ago

Stirling, Aug. 6 (Special)—Representatives of three outstanding pioneer families of Hastings County gathered at Fairfield's Bridge for the first annual re-union and picnic. The event took place on the Thompson homestead when the first Robert Thompson settled more than one hundred and forty years ago.

Numbering well over two hundred and fifty the provid members of these stalwart families came from all parts of the county in cars and truck and by the splendid weather in spite of an overcast sky, which was a welcome from the sun provided an excellent day for both young and old. Dinner was served by the ladies of the gathering and several relics of family history were on display some such as cradles used for harvesting grain, which could not be clearly explained by the older members present. Preparations for the big day were completely by a staff of capable ladies and workers under the direction of Mr. Gilbert Thompson, Stirling, President of Stirling. Following the dinner members of the family who had not seen each other in many years spent some time in renewing old friendships.

The gathering was finally called to order by Mr. Arthur Brown of Stirling who introduced Mr. Gilbert Thompson as chairman and an interesting program of musical numbers and speeches followed. Dr. Deamont of Stirling was the first speaker and gave a fine address on "Family History". Having spent considerable time in research, Dr. Deamont was able to present a very accurate account of the early settlers in the district bearing these three family names. Many have since become so important throughout the country.

Other prominent members of the gathering who spoke briefly were Mr. Wm. Thompson, eighty-five and one of the oldest living members of the group; Mr. Percy McDavitt who now lives upon the homestead and Mr. Egbert Demorest of Madoc. Mr. Alex Reid of Oshawa. Nine(9) numbers included on the program were musical offerings by master Gerald Thompson; Instrumental duets by Misses Robinson and Mrs. Demorest by Arthur Duncan.

Officers For 1938 Elected

The election of officers for the next year resulted in the following ladies and gentlemen being appointed to direct the activities of the organization: President, Mr. Albert Thompson, Stirling; 1st Vice President, Mr. Percy McDavitt, Stirling; 2nd Vice President, Mrs. Abbott of Madoc; Secretary, Mrs. Gilbert Thompson, Belleville; Treasurer, Dr. Demorest, Stirling. It was also decided the next year's picnic would be held on the same picnic grounds on Civic Holiday. Communications were received by the secretary and presented to the gathering from Mrs. Kathleen Reid of Shannonville; Mrs. Harry Wheeler of Kelvington, Sask.; and Mr. H. F. McDavitt of Wilkie Sask., each expressing their regret for being unable to attend the event.

Great Interest in Sports

The younger members of the group spent the afternoon swimming, playing ball and taking part in the races, which were directed by the sports committee with the winners in each event being as follows: Girls race, 6 to 10, Keith Weese; Boys race 6 to 10, Orval Thornton; Girls 10 to 14, Marie MacCullough; boys, 10 to 14, Kenneth Thompson; young ladies race, Miss Hilda Elliott; Grandmother's Nail-driving contest, Mrs. A. Reid; Grandfather's sewing contest, Mr. Woods.

The prize for the oldest member present was awarded to Mrs. Vanderwater, aged eighty-five years. To the youngest present, Francis Thompson, and to Mr. and Mrs. Warner of Detroit, Mich. went the prize for the party coming from the greatest distance. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Reid carried off first honors for the largest family present numbering eleven in all. Keenest interest was displayed in the final sports event of the day a tug-o-war with the Reids and Demorests opposing the Thompsons with the latter team winning on a close decision.

Several of the families remained for supper and considering everything the first re-union of these three important families has established a record that will be hard to eclipse in the future.

"Case or Keg Let's Proceed"

"What are you bringing into this court—have you another case, or should I say keg," asked Crown Attorney R. C. Denman, K.C. of F. C. Arnott when the latter carried a large four gallon keg into today's local police court.

"Sorry, sir, this is Traffic Officer Ervine's case—not mine keg," replied the Constable.

"All right, case or keg, let's proceed," added the Crown Attorney, as the court smiled.

CEMETERY BOARD

by the caretaker board, a superintendent said yesterday.

Cemetery officials have kept up the beautiful hillside spot where the famed "Father of Confederation" lies buried, but superintendent Peter Purdy said "something should be done to insure the grave perpetual care." He added there was little likelihood the plot would be touched.

He said the cemetery board had the right to remove bodies from stone dcash of Sir John's son, Sir Hugh MacDonald of Winnipeg in 1926. The grave is a shrine visited every year by hundreds of persons with a love of political history, Sir Hugh a magistrate in Winnipeg, had paid for the plot's upkeep prior to his death.

Responses Under Act

Under the Cemetery Act, Mr. Purdy said any plot in which there has been no burial for 30 years and on which the maintenance fee has been paid for five years, the cemetery may repossess. This does not mean the grave would be disturbed, but the vacant land in the plot could be sold.

Sir John's grave is marked by a single column of granite and a plain white sandstone cross, bearing the inscription: "John Alexander MacDonald, 1815-1891. He sleeps beside his wife, his sister, Lucia; his brother, Hugh; and his son and namesake, John." Also other members of the Macdonald lie buried in the same cemetery. Not far from Sir John's grave is that of Sir Alexander Campbell, Sir John Colborne, Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir George A. Kirkpatrick and George Monro Grant.

today, 50 years later, he heads Cutta Percha's Mechanical Goods Division.

Comparison makes Mr. Scott's record all the more impressive. Today the average young man commences business life at 20. To equal Mr. Scott's record at 62 he must spend more than 80% of his life in one organization. The average young man would be required to work until he was a hundred years old. Far from being a centenarian, however, W. J. Scott is younger than most men of 62. Mentally, actually, vigorous physically, he is the active head of a vast department in an organization that was but four years old when he joined it and which has grown during 1.5 years of service to become the largest All-Canadian rubber company.

washing my head with cold water from a miniature falls we had just passed.

The bandagagie my head, and then told me he was going to help. He said not to move from where I was and that he would be back soon. Then he was gone up the mountainside.

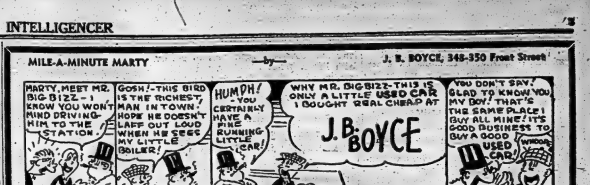
"I heard rocks rolling down for a while and then it was quiet for a long time. I just lay there and waited, without trying to move around."

But Canseni was unable to find his way back in the darkness. He left the rescue party below the cliff by mistake.

"After a long time," Cooper said, "I heard someone about, and I could see flashlights moving down below me. Then they were gone and I heard and rolling more all night long."

Canseni led another rescue party to the scene of the next morning but they were unable to reach the ledge. A message from the camp was sent to Morley to seek aid from Constable W. F. Cno Solway of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Constable Solway called in Kutechers, the Austrian guide.

Guide Effects Rescue



With full mountain equipment, and using experience gained through the years spent in his native Alps and in the Rockies, Kutchers finally made the descent to the ledge. His was aided only by Canseni

A rope was then fastened about Cooper's shoulder and after a five minute struggle over 1,200 feet of jagged rocks and cliff, he was returned to sheer ground.

Kutchers left the work of returning Cooper to Camp Chief Hector to the other members of the party. He had to hurry back to Banff.

As he passed through the Stoney Indian camp 14 miles from Camp Chief Hector and four from the ledge, he noticed the famous his achievement.

"The others are bringing Copper down," he said. "He's O.K."

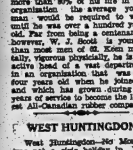
STORMY WEATHER OVER ATLANTIC

New York, Aug. 6—(AP)—Stormy weather over the Atlantic today gave the Pan American Clipper III the first significant test of its flights to determine the feasibility of commercial air traffic between Europe and America.

Shortly after taking off from the River Shannon, at Foynes, Ireland at 4:19 a.m. (11:19 p.m. E.D.T. Thursday) on its return trip to North America, the giant flying boat ran into the mid.

Battling a 37-mile-an-hour headwind, the plane was 200 miles from Foynes at 2:30 a.m. E.T., Pan American Airway official here reported. Then it was 400 miles out and said it was flying only 500 feet above the waves because of a low ceiling.

It was the first all-daylight crossing of the test flights.

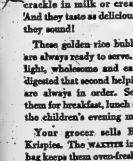


Captain Harold E. Gray, commanding a crew of seven, hoped to bring the Clipper down at Botwood, Nfld. about 3.00 p.m. E.D.T. after a 1,985-mile flight.

GHOSTS WALK AT CAPITOL THEATRE

Whirling ghostly spectral forms flitting through the air; the clanking of cold chains; a shadowy one as they pass by; the eerie sounds of cold fingers; and the flutter of wings, perhaps of those long passed on; all these go to make up the atmosphere which the management of the Capitol Theatre has created to thrill its patrons at a midnight entertainment to be held in the theatre Friday night.

Strange noises, hollow sounds, the lap-lap of water against the sides on unseen doors will make the "goosefleshers" sit up and take notice and the hair rise on your neck as the stage presentation which comes from the famous Madame Tussaud's Chamber of Horrors in London, England, gets under way.



It will be a night of nights for those who will take their entertainment in a weird mysterious setting. On the screen will be shown a picture especially produced to give hair-raising as the stage show. Combine the two and patrons of this popular theatre will have a night's fun which will live long in their memory.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself in his private chair when I came pitching 3 matchsticks at the waste paper basket, saying, Look, pop, I can throw them rite in the basket pretty near every time.

Prety good, the first cousin to pretty far, pop said. When I was a young feller I was captain of the baseball team and the graceful combination of accuracy and speed with which I crashed those balls over the plate, was the talk of the town, he said, and I said, Well that dont say you can pitch matchsticks.

That's just what it does say, pop said, Pitching is pitching, whatever you pitch. I'll garantee to take 20 matchsticks rite now and herl all but 2 or 3 of them rite into the plum center of that basket. Maybe all but one, or maybe every single one, how can I tell? he said, and I said, Try it, then you can tell, and I'll take it and we'll have a pitching contest.

Where are we going to get 40 matches? pop said.

And he looked in his pockets and found 3 partly used packets and I ran down in the kitchin and found 3 more, and we then got all the matches, making just 22 apiece, and started to throw them and account every one that went in the basket, not being many to count on account of most of them being all over the floor pop saying He's maybe all but one, or maybe every single one, how can I tell? he said, and I said, Try it, then you can tell, and I'll take it and we'll have a pitching contest.

Pop and I then got down on all fours and found 3 partly used packets and I ran down in the kitchin and found 3 more, and we then got all the matches, making just 22 apiece, and started to throw them and account every one that went in the basket, not being many to count

BETTER TO KILL TIME THAN PEOPLE

"You cannot anticipate all highway hazards. Allow a margin of safety."

So runs a word of advice from the Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways, in a chart showing some of the factors which affect the safe speed of motor cars.

They all start of course with the driver, whose mentality, emotions and reactions are set against a combination of weather conditions, light conditions, traffic conditions, human reactions, highway conditions and car characteristics.

Some of the human reactions due to physical or mental defects or otherwise are given as follows—inattention, distraction through worry, conversation, aggressive hot-headed dislike of restraint or regulation, insistence upon rights; influence of liquor or drugs; fatigue; slow or sluggish condition of mind; panicky or excitable spirit; lack of courtesy; recklessness or taking a chance; love of thrills; timidity and impulsiveness. One can see from this how large a factor the personal equation is in driving on modern highways.

Those who travelled the roads last Saturday and how traffic conditions affected their travel with its density, heavy traffic slowly moving. On the other hand there is traffic which is light and fast. The classifications and types of vehicles are no small factor on safe driving speed. Loads of hay were encountered on main highways last Saturday and other horse-drawn vehicles. These create a situation calling for coolness and carefulness. Other traffic conditions are parked cars and the bright lights — both of which create hazards which cannot be neglected.

Highways whether they are of gravel, paved or unimproved, slippery or skid-proof, make a difference. It is important whether roads are crowned or flat with or without ditches. The curves are a factor not to be neglected. Are the roads banked at these curves? If not the driver must be particularly careful. Is the curvature on a large or small sweep? Is the road narrow or wide? Are there hills and grades? What of intersections and private drives? The state of repair of the highways also counts.

On the car characteristics the motorist must count on the car's roadability, which includes such factors as centre of gravity of the car, its weight, steering, wheelbase, top speed, riding comfort, freedom from noise, and freedom from carbon monoxide. On decelerability there is the question of brakes and non-skid tires, new or worn. On the mechanical side the driver must think of the condition of the tires to resist blowouts and know whether the gear shift is in good condition or slipping or shimmy proof.

All the weather conditions enter into driving more than into any other situation where man is brought into relationship with the weather. Is there rain or snow, or fog or wind and dust? Is the winshield obscured or is the headlight obscured?

There is the light condition which takes cognizances of daylight, dusk and darkness.

These fats are but preamble to consideration of the increase of fatalities and accidents. In May deaths on highways rose 37.1 per cent and accident 17.8 per cent over figures for the same month last year.

For the first five months of this year the accident total went up 27.8 per cent. Fatal accidents rose 53.6 per cent and non-fatal 24.9 per cent. gasoline consumption increased 12.8 per cent, and motor registrations 8.8 per cent.

One factor in collisions stands out—those with fixed objects where increase was 59.8 per cent and the non-collision type which went up 97.3 per cent.

Pedestrian death total from accidents went up 75 per cent in the five months.

One cannot face these facts and not think.

THE 'MAIN STREET'

The plastic surgeon is a fairly recent comer to the beauty industry. His business is face-lifting. With a calm hand, a sterile scalpel, and the inspiration of a sculptor, he hoists sagging cheeks, resolves multiple chins, shoos away "grow's feet", and banishes bumps from bulging noses. All this to help woman — and men, too — retrieve the youthful look, says Rotary magazine.

But face-lifting is not confined to the human physiognomy. Cities—just as proud as the folks who compose them—have lately begun to make appointments with those beauty experts, the architect and the engineer, bidding them lift the face of Main Street.

A certain American comedian, please indulge his pun, thinks that we have been wrinkled up with care and worry for so long that now is a good time to get our faith lifted. What better way to lift a townsman's faith in his town than to consider, and then to do something about lifting the face of Main Street?

EMPTIES COMING BACK

Have you ever sat by the railroad track
And watched the empties coming back,
Lumbering along with a groan and a whine
Smoke streaming out in a long gray line
Belched from the engine's panting stack,
Just empties coming back?

I have, and to me those empties seem Like dreams I used to dream
Of a girl, or money, or maybe fame.
My dreams have all returned the same,
Swinging along the home-bound track,
Just empties coming back.

BELLEVILLE FAIR BUILDINGS HAVE BEEN TREATED TO SEVERAL COATS OF PAINT and the change is striking. The Fair Grounds now look bright and attractive and with the winter management which visualized the Greater Belleville Fair and those who have followed in his footsteps and endeavored to fulfill the vision that was his, often under very discouraging conditions. The paint period came none too soon, but the spick and span appearance of the grounds and buildings augurs well for a Bigger and Better Belleville Fair than ever this year. One thing few people realize that in order to have a successful fall fair the directors have to work practically twelve months in the year—and when they give their services so full and free for the betterment of Belleville and the district surely the least the non-workers can do is to favor the fair with their attendance everyday and evening if possible, praise it and its officers instead of indulging in destructive criticism, and help in every way to make Belleville Fair a name to denote excellence in every part of Canada. Belleville Fair is yours and will be just what you make it by your attendance and encouragement.

OUR AMERICAN COUSINS, MEANING OUR YANKEE COUSINS FROM SOUTH OF THE LINE, for we are just as much Americans as they are, are coming to like Canada more and more and seize every opportunity to cross the line and mingle with us. Folks used to say that the liquor brought them but now they have more liquor at home and more ways to get it easy than we have they are coming in greater numbers. Five little French Canadian babies way up where the north and the gold and silver begins are attracting thousands of Yankees every day, and even Casa Loma Castle in Toronto, operated by Kiwanis as a tourist rendezvous attracts as many as five thousand tourists a day at two bits a tourist, (to the great detriment of Casa Loma it is said for even the knobs on the doors are being removed surreptitiously as souvenirs). An evidence of tourist traffic from south of the line is the fact that 1,183 motor cars were ferried at Brockville from New York State over last week-end.

CANADIANS DO NOT APPRECIATE HOW FORTUNATE THEY ARE TO BE LIVING IN CANADA. They have a goodly heritage but do they appreciate it to the full? Editor of Tit-Bits, English humorous publication, does not think so. Speaking over CBC from Ottawa Wednesday night he said that when he landed at Quebec he felt like falling on his knees and thanking God for such a country as Canada, far from the madhouse of Europe. Said he: Do the Canadian people realize their good fortune in not having to train their children in the use of gas masks, in not having to construct a bomb and gas proof chamber in their homes as protection against air raids? He had heard since landing many eulogistic remarks made about the success of commercial flying over the Atlantic. Don't be too hasty with enthusiasm for the opening of the airlanes to fast plane traffic. Canadians, said he, may yet curse the day when airplanes were invented. Not very pleasant chatter from the editor of a humorous publication but it gives one to think. On the lighter side he expressed himself as pleased beyond measure with the grace, beauty and elegance of Canadian Women, being particularly sold on their charms. He had done a bit of broadcasting in the Old Country and was particularly pleased with everything he had come in contact with since landing in Canada. Thanks for the Tit-Bit from this English editor.

FAR FROM MEEK ON POLO FIELD

"The hand that rocks the cradle" can also take a healthy swipe at a polo ball." That's bringing the old quotation up to date. This photo was made at Ranelagh, England, during play for the ladies' inter-club polo invitation cup. Announcement to this effect was made in the British official statement. The British forces had captured St. Julien, together with nine other villages, on Tuesday, but were forced to retire on Wednesday. Last night's report from British Headquarters in France, says Haig's men "have again established themselves in St. Julien."

Quintuplets Both Thrive

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 6.—(CP)—A post-mortem baby born here May 17 apparently was thirty-two days old when it was born, Dr. Wrong said at an ordinary hospital and performed a Cesarian operation. Within eight minutes, the baby, yelling lustily, was being bathed in olls.

"She has thrived ever since. She now weighs eight pounds.

"The baby's father is Angelo Scroll, at present away from work with a broken rib. Doctors and neighbors have taught his four-year-old daughter, Jennie, to "mother" Antonette. Jennie gives her sister her regular bottles of milk.

WILSON PREPARES FOR TORONTO RACE

Kid Kar Derby Winner Will Represent City in Contest

"We have all the faith in the world in George Wilson," Kinsman Cleo Dulling said last night when asked regarding the chances of the Belleville Kid Kar Derby winner in the forthcoming Soap Box Derby being held in Toronto next week. "Why, he'll win in a walk. One of the rules of the race is that the entries must be rubber-tired, and that is right up Wilson's alley. That car of his, given a long hill, will romp home ahead of anything they have up there," he pronounced enthusiastically.

"The fact that the Kinsmen's Club is sponsoring the winner of their derby does not prevent any other Belleville boy from entering the Toronto race," Mr. Dulling added. "Anyone can enter providing they abide by the rules laid down by the Danforth Business Men's Club, the sponsors of the race.

"Any boy desirous of entering can obtain all particulars from the Soap Box Derby, 646 Danforth Ave., Toronto. We would like to see Belleville well represented, and if possible bring home the bacon. As it is I think Canada will be the Canadian champion this time next week. His Kar is being fixed up and we are holding a test run on Derby hill over the week-end. If everything is satisfactory, the car will be crated and shipped to Toronto on Monday."

POLICE COURT

A large and lengthy docket welcomed Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., as he took his accustomed seat for the only session of local police court held in Belleville this week.

Clarke Ryckman, Trenton, appeared charged with theft. The man was represented by Charles A. Payne, K.C., who after a short consultation with Crown Attorney R. C. Donnan, K.C., announced the Crown was not ready to proceed. Upon the mutual consent of both counsels, the case was enlarged for one month. Ryckman faces charges of the theft of money from the Central Battery and Tire Shop, charges which he emphatically denies.

Ralph Cannon, Belleville, pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving and was fined ten dollars and costs and had his operator's license suspended two days. "There were very bad brakes on this man's vehicle, which resulted in his colliding with the rear of another motor vehicle," prompted Acting Chief Harman.

Frank High pleaded guilty to a charge of selling liquor and was given two months in the common jail. The charge arose out of a police raid on High's premises nearly two months ago.

Horace Pitts, Detroit, appeared charged with reckless driving, arising out of an accident that happened in Foxboro last Saturday, and pleaded guilty. There was considerable damage done during this accident and the costs are also rather high. Informed Crown Attorney Donnan, which prompted His Worship to levy a fine of $15.00. The costs amounted to $39.35, however. Pitts assured the court that restitution had already been made in the matter of damages resulting from the accident.

Pitts and three companions in his car pleaded guilty to charges of consuming liquor also. The charges were preferred in connection with the recent raid on the Moiseyetz Patrolman Sam Erying, who also produced a four gallon keg, partially filled with beer. It was not submitted in evidence, however.

Four inebriates appeared charged with drunkenness, all pleaded guilty and two paid their fines with the remaining pair taking the conventional jail sentence in default of payment. A number of motorists appeared for speeding on local streets, all such pleas being accepted in writing, the delinquents not having to appear personally.

Advice to the Lovelorn

by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

These Belittling Husbands

"He's lovely to me when we're alone, but he belittles me before company," writes an unhappy young wife who, in addition to caring for an eighteen-months-old baby, does all her own housework.

She washes and irons—even the belittling husband's shirts. She cooks so well that her cake has taken a prize at the county fair, and her home is neat as a pin. Still, friend husband wails till he gets an audience, and then makes fun of her.

She stands to see one of her own family, any in-law or even a neighbor drop in, for whenever this happens the fun is on for the husband.

She months ago, while she was wheeling the baby home from the chain store with the groceries packed in his carriage, the little fellow threw out a two-pound package of sugar. The loss of the sugar, costing twelve cents has rankled for half a year. This is the husband's favorite story of his wife's inefficiency.

There is also the stock-in-trade jokes about her biscuits; he doesn't go swimming the day she has them for breakfast." He refers to the meal muslin curtains as "window rags," and when a pair of candles were lighted in honor of glass candlesticks given by his favorite sister as a wedding present, he referred to them as "grease-stick holders." If she answers back, he says she has a "martial roughneck."

The woman has lost heart, she cares nothing now about her house, which used to be her "pride and joy." When people come, she sits in a corner and waits for the next hand grenade to be thrown. She wants to put the baby in a day nursery, and accept a job a friend has offered—in a boarding house, as assistant manager—but the baby is the question. Will the husband give him up?

Now, mental specialists (psychiatrists" is such an unwieldy word) have diagnosed the case of these belittling males as the grisly boo. Men are jealous because they feel inferior to their highly capable wives. Nature has supplied these lesser partners with "inferiority compensation" and they nag and belittle before people to put themselves right before their little circle, consisting of relatives, in-laws and acquaintances.

But, it seems to me, any woman with this problem on her hands might get a lot of fun out of establishing a "cure for belittling husbands" at home. When he brings out the biscuit joke, stop baking biscuits and let him eat cold toast instead.

Present him with the twelve cents lost when junior threw away the sugar. Take down the curtains and let him see how grim an unshaded room looks, and sweetly return the candlesticks to his sister, saying her bronze disapproves of "grease-sticks."

If a woman can mean a game of this, and not let it break her spirit, she won't have to put her baby in a nursery or take a job as assistant manager of a boarding house. Whatever happens, don't let life break your spirit. It's God's special gift to you.

What do you know of "belittling husbands?" We'll be glad to publish your experience.

OLYMPENE
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

Fashion Flashes

By Alice Aldam

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Always good is the simply-cut dress of fine black crepe, made without any trimming or unnecessary detail. A smart model is of black silk jersey cut with beautiful folds and subtle drapery. A collarless V neckline and self-girdle are nice details.

Ideal for the commuter is an ensemble frock of black and white printed chiffon worn with a short cape coat of black bengaline.

Seal sleek is a swim suit of shining black-satin fish skin, elastic threads woven through. A cape to match, with a white lining that can be worn on either side, completes a smart beach outfit.

Linen looms as first favorite this summer. A grand mix of black non-crush linen is worn with a bolero of bleached white, piqueshirt linen with stitchings on the cuffs and pocket tabs.

A "must" for the smart girl is a dinner hat. And no one would need coaxing to wear a large black crin beret with a rolled bat-like crin brim. It is held in the centre by a cluster of huge crinkly crinoline that extend to the nape of the neck.

Off to Mexico for style inspiration. A lovely print is in gray silk crepe, serving as background for Mexican scenes in multi-colored and bright red, yellow and white. The buttons are tiny red sombreros.

GOOD MANNERS

by MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Birth Announcements

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. To whom are birth announcements sent . . . to all friends, or only those not likely to hear of the event?

2. It is necessary to send "thank you" cards for gifts received at a shower or afterward, if the person is thanked graciously at the time the gift is given?

3. To persons not knowing the baby's given name of the mother, what is the correct signature on birth announcements?

S.

1. Birth announcements, if they are sent, should be personally sent to relatives and all friends.

2. If, by "Thank-you cards" you mean the cards with the thank-you message engraved or printed on them . . . these are never en good taste. The reason is obvious . . . no one wants to receive such an impersonal acknowledgement of a personal thought, a generous gesture. One sentence composed and hand-written by a friend is worth all the ready-made cards in the world. To send ready-made thank-you cards is inexcusable and definitely rude . . . they are impersonal, bleak, cold-hearted, and lazy, lazy, lazy.

When friends has been so especially kind as to come to a shower given in one's honor, one's gifts to make us happy, it is gracious of us to write at least a brief note of thanks to one, as soon as we possibly can after the shower. The next day, if possible.

3. It is often necessary, under these circumstances, for the mother to write a line under the Mr. and Mrs. name, giving her maiden name, for identification.

Baby's Thanks

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When a baby is born and gifts are given to the child, should the mother write the thank-you notes and sign her name, or should she write the notes and sign the baby's name?

2. Would blue note paper be correct?

3. Please give me an idea how such notes should be written. Perhaps you would be willing to give me a sample note?

Mother

1. It always seems to me a bit too "whimsical" for a mother to write thank-you notes to the baby's name. It's better, more dignified for the mother to write a gracious note of thanks and sign her own name.

2. Yes, blue letter-paper if the shade is a pleasant one, is proper for these notes.

3. A note of thanks of this kind might read something like this:

Dear Mary,

Bless you, and thank you, my year friend, for your good and generous gift for baby and me. How kind you are, and as usual, how perfect. How you have! The carriage robe is a beauty . . . of course I can hardly wait to feel the soft luxurious material, and such a ravishing shade of pink like baby's dear skin. I love it, and I know my baby will be so proud to show it to the world when he walks. Neither she nor I dreamed that we would receive such a lovely gift.

The dearest of love, and the deepest of thanks for your great goodness and for your masterpiece gift.

Affectionately,

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on GOOD MANNERS submitted to readers.

PRESENTATION

Moira, Aug. 5—On Wednesday evening, Miss Ruth Emerson, a former teacher, and life-long resident of the community was the recipient of a purse of money on behalf of the community. The following is the address which was read by Miss Norma Ketchenon.

Miss Ruth Emerson:

Dear Ruth:

This is an occasion unique in Moira District, for it is in your own life also; for you receive our best wishes in a twofold way, as our teacher, and as a much appreciated member of the community.

Your unfailing and generous support of the church and Sunday School has been a great benefit and in this field you will be sorely missed indeed. There are many words of praise and affection that we could convey to you, but we shall simply say that we wish you all true happiness and may God bless you in the new life on which you are going.

Signed on behalf of the Sunday School and community: Norma Ketchenon, Donald Hutcheson, Bessie English, Betty Foster.

Miss Emerson replied very suitably, thanking one and all for the gift, also added that her years as teacher, had been extremely pleasant ones, as the parents and children had all worked in harmony with her in the school. She extended a hearty invitation for all to call, as Miss Wright has now come home.)

Following this all joined in singing "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow."

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

Kipling's "Wee Willie Winkie" and Coronation in Technicolor

Kipling's stirring characters live glamorously, adventurously, and courageously on Adventure's last frontier in the Twentieth Century. Our picturization of his famed "Wee Willie Winkie" coming to the Belle Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, matinees daily, with Shirley Temple and Victor McLaglen in the starring roles.

From the heart of mighty India comes all the world's love of strange, where the British raj ends at Khyber Pass, to the land of the Bengal Lancers, comes this glorious adventure of the Scottish Highlanders in action! and of the little girl who won the right to wear their plaid.

The most spectacular production in which Shirley Temple has yet appeared, "Wee Willie Winkie" gives Victor McLaglen a powerful role as a fearless, fighting fool, and provides splendid opportunities for Audrey Smith, June Lang, Michael Mark, Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott.

Life at a frontier army post in India is the setting for Shirley and her widowed mother, June Lang, for her grandfather, C. Aubrey Smith, is a great Scottish officer. The youngster decides that the only way to win the Queen's approval is to become a soldier herself, and her friend, Michael Whalen, a young lieutenant, turns her career for training to the burley sergeant Victor McLaglen. Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott.

Life at a frontier army post in India is the setting for Shirley and her widowed mother, June Lang, for her grandfather, C. Aubrey Smith, is a great Scottish officer. The youngster decides that the only way to win the Queen's approval is to become a soldier herself, and her friend, Michael Whalen, a young lieutenant, turns her career for training to the burley sergeant Victor McLaglen. Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott.

Shirley gets into plenty of trouble at the post, but wins the gratitude of an important chieftan, Khoda Khan, when she returns his lost amulet. In a surprise raid on the post, the proud chieftan is freed, and the border is immediately aflame with intrigue, warfare, and McLaglen's life being one of those lost.

Feeling that both Khoda Khan and her grandfather would prefer peace, Shirley makes a desperate ride to end the killing, and sets out at night for the Pathan camp. When her departure is discovered, three highlanders set out for Khyber Pass, learn of the danger, and are determined to rescue her or die in the attempt. With lives at stake, Shirley makes her last dramatic gesture to save them and restore peace, bringing the picture to a thrilling climax.

Coronation in Colors

A special feature production on the same program is the Coronation in technicolor, one of the most beautiful pictures ever exhibited, revealing the riotous color of robes and jewels . . . of uniforms, and all in their true color. The Belle World News and a comedy color cartoon are also exhibited on the same program.

AT THE REGENT

Excellent Films

A powerful drama of ten lives thrown together to work out their destinies within twelve hours in a city under heavy bombardment makes "The Last Train from Madrid," at the Belle tonight only, one of the most vital, gripping and startling screen documents to emerge from Hollywood. Played by a brilliant cast of players which includes the glamorous Dorothy Lamour, Lew Ayres, Gilbert Roland, Karen Morley and a large supporting cast of favorites.

Wallace Beery in his most laughable and lovable role to Don Marquis's "Good Old Soak" is announced as the second feature attraction on the same program. Supporting the popular star are such popular players as Tom Brown, Patric Knowles, Ted Healy, Judith Barrett, Betty Furness, George Sidney and Janet Beecher. Penny Singleton's very interesting Pete Smith oddity in color concludes a splendid program.

AT THE CAPITOL

Gene Autry in "Yodelin' Kid from Pine Ridge"

That man Autry's here again! The return of the invincible Gene in "Yodelin' Kid From Pine Ridge" newest of the Gene Autry musical westerns at the Capitol on Saturday only matinee and evening. Evening show starting at 6:30.

The curious thing about Autry pictures, is the way they grow on one. We've been following this singing cowboy's hit since he first started making pictures two years ago, and we're convinced that he's one of the outstanding attractions on the screen today. A recent magazine poll has established that he receives more fan mail than Robert Taylor—which indicates plenty!

Gene's heroine in the current picture is Betty Brosnan, the girl who won the heart of a nation several years ago with her unforgettable role of "Penny Priest."

Gene, according to the script, has become estranged from his father because of his wild ways. The elder Autry in a cattle war, so he learns the hard way, has sent his heart, Milly, to seek his fortunes in the "Yodelin' Kid from Pine Ridge." He joins up with a rodeo, and when, two years later, he returns to Pine Ridge, he is in a position to help his father and woos his schoolday sweetheart.

The fathers of both Gene and Milly are mysteriously killed, and the crime is blamed on Gene. Radicals, still resentful of the part he played in their cattle war, are about to lynch him, but Gene stages a spectacular jail break and proves in a thrilling manner who are the real heavies responsible.

A large supporting cast including Smiley Burnette, LeRoy Mason, Charles Middleton and Russell Hayden is announced. Chapter 3 of Zorro's adventures.

FAMOUS RACE WRITER, NATIVE OF ONTARIO DIES AT SARATOGA

Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Aug. 6 (CP)—William J. (Bunk) Macbeth, top-ranking race writer, is dead and today a new signature went on the New York Herald-Tribune's stories from this famous old Spa race course.

Macbeth, a native of Ingersoll, Ontario, who rose to prominence as sports writer, wrote his last race Wednesday. Soon he suffered an internal hemorrhage, was taken to Saratoga Hospital, almost within sound of the racing hooves, and died last night.

A veteran of 33 years in newspaper work, he would have been 53 August 18. He is survived by his widow and a daughter, Jean.

He was credited with being instrumental in bringing Babe Ruth to New York baseball and starting professional hockey in New York City.

Before entering newspaper work Macbeth taught district school in Ontario. Then he joined the Detroit Free Press and in 1908-09 was sports editor of the Montreal Herald.

Worked in Detroit

He returned to Detroit to write baseball for the Detroit Times and thereafter served in the same capacity on the New York American, the New York Sun, the New York Tribune and the Herald-Tribune.

His host of friends in sports and journalism called him "Bunk" and a mass of anecdote and legend grew up around him and his career.

One such story concerned the visit of a fight promoter when Macbeth was acting sports editor of the Tribune. He informed the promoter space would be given "the champion of South Africa" if the scribe's way was good. A few days later the promoter returned, his fighter in tow, and announced, "Here's the champion of South Africa."

Bunk, so the story goes, rose from his chair, hung a long-count sign around the lad's neck and announced: "Now I'm the champion of South Africa."

Advised Purchase of Ruth

In the winter of 1918 it was Bunk who counselled Colonel T. L. Huston and Colonel Jake Ruppert, then joint owners of the Yankees, that Babe Ruth should be purchased from the Red Sox, the team he socked 29 homers for the previous season.

Bunk race writer played hockey as a youth in Canada and in 1926, after operating a successful professional club in Boston in cooperation with the late Tom Dorgan, Canadian promoter, Macbeth induced Bill Dwyer to put up the money to bring professional hockey to New York.

He helped found the Baseball Writers' Association and the Turf Writers' Association.

LEAGUE LEADERS TAKEN BY LATTA IN PLAYOFF GAME

Cannifton Defeated 12-9 in Comedy of Errors

SMITH SHELLED

Callaghan Hurls Well in Relief Role to Save Contest

Cannifton, Aug. 5—Latta is one game up in the semi-finals of the South Hastings League as a result of their 12-9 win over Cannifton the erstwhile first place team of the loop. Some of the most weird baseball that has been played on this diamond was dished up to the fans, as a total of 15 errors, 30 hits and seven bases on balls made a combination sure of stamping on the base paths.

Cannifton sent their ace right-hander E. Smith against the Latta aggregation, but a total of eight errors and four walks interspersed by 12 safeties kept the youngster ex-Ballmer hurler continually in hot water. Ernie certainly did his share, when he sent an error sheet back to the bench by the strike-out route, but Young was manager Webb's choice for hurling duty and the curve ball artist stood the hard going until the fifth inning he was relieved by K. Callaghan who bears the born name as Eldon Auker. Callaghan was nicking for two hits and a double play in that sixth, and somewhat hurled shutout ball. Cannifton collected nine safeties after relief had been delivered of Young and Callaghan while the same number of batsmen came to strikeouts.

Runners on Every Frame

Latta managed to get runners aboard in every inning but the second not more than one to a side. In the second, fifth and seventh, Cannifton scored four in the first and in the three a three run lead attained by Latta in their half was whittled down up even again in the third only to have Cannifton score another in their half of the fifth. Latta's scored four to go three ahead but Cannifton tied it up at eight apiece in the fifth. Latta went on to score two in the last and one and two in the eighth and ninth. Cannifton got their last marker in the sixth. The Latta infield came in for a bit at this point of the game and in the seventh and eighth innings put on two fast double plays to cut short threatening Cannifton rallies.

Art Cole's smashing four base clout in the fourth was waited as there was no one on base. It was the only hard hit of the afternoon both D. Sharpe, Cannifton centre, pulled down a couple that looked like goners, the out short rallys W of the winning Latta team.

Vanderbilt in Class by Self As Amateur Skipper, Ranger Being Queen of Racing Sloops

America's Cup Races End With U. S. Boat Winning Four Straight

ONE RECORD BROKEN

Endeavour Outsailed Ranger For Twenty Miles in Thursday's Race

(By A. D. Merkel)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Newport, R.I., Aug. 6.—(CP)—Harold Stirling Vanderbilt, today was recognized in a class by himself as an amateur skipper with his whitehulled Ranger crowned Queen of the Racing Sloops.

The United States yachts all-conquering performance against T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour II removed all doubt in the big ship is the fastest ever built for Class "J" competition. She won her fourth straight race from the British challenger yesterday to defend successfully the America's Cup.

In her final stand Endeavour proved she was not outclassed and had it not been for a premature start, the first in cup-racing history, the result might have been sweeping. The British boat outsailed Ranger after the American boat's record performance for the 10-mile windward beat over the 30-mile triangular course.

Seventh Trapped

Sopwith was trapped before the start between the buoy and his rival and was virtually forced to across the line before the starting Caught much like a base-runner between bases, the Briton went across the line 10 seconds late and signal sounded to allow Vander-bilt a wide advantage, as he had to bring Endeavour around the buoy for a fresh start.

Ranger's accomplishment yesterday against keener competition followed three previous triumphs, two of which were by the biggest margins in 50 years of cup racing. Sopwith's failure marked his second and Great Britain's 16th unsuccessful attempt to regain the "Old Mug".

1,000 Yards Astern

Endeavour II was approximately 1,000 yards behind Ranger as Vanderbilt sailed his boat across the finish line for a course record of three hours, seven minutes, 49 seconds. It was the British boat's best performance, having lost the first three races by less than three and one-mile margins respectively.

Sopwith's poor start gave Vanderbilt an opportunity to build up a windward margin that settled the issue early in the contest which might have been a close race into another parade. The challenger outdid Ranger over the last 20 miles, sailed in breezes of from 12 to 16 miles an hour. Sopwith's boat showed superiority for the first time in the best-of-seven race series.

Sopwith Trapped

But the start came too late to have much effect and all it did was keep the British boat from being outclassed and reduce the final margin by half a minute.

Both records toppled by Ranger were previously held by Sopwith's three Endeavours. They established in the second race with Vanderbilt's Rainbow in 1934. By eclipsing these marks Vanderbilt got revenge for the defeat administered by Sopwith's former challenger in a club cruise two days before the cursory cup matches.

The defeat by Endeavour I in Sesbery sire, with Sherman Hoyt, American seaman, as the helmsman is the only setback Ranger has suffered since she was launched this spring.

POINT ANNERS EVEN SERIES IN LOOP PLAYOFFS

Defeat Bell-Sargents in Second Game by 10-3

LUFFMAN SMART

Winning Hurler Restricts Opposition to Eight Hits

Restricting the opposition to scoring in only one inning, Stan Luffman hurled Point Anne Elks "Cementmen" back into the local Senior Softball League play-offs as the 'Ox Point' nine defeated the Belleville-Sargents 10 to 3 in their second league game at the Tavistock Village last evening, the "lockmen" having won the initial tilt. A third and deciding game will be played next week.

Luffman hurled splendid ball and scattered eight hits, garnered by the Bell-Sargents, completely baffling the "Lockmen" counting three singles for their three hits in the sixth inning. Biddle Schreiber, who had previously triumphed over the lockmasters in the play-off, was relief ager Chuck Barnett's choice for second duties, but eight runners crove Schreider to the showers, in favour of Sager in the fifth frame. The two opposing moundsmen hurled shutout ball until a trio of hits and a couple of errors gave the Point Anne nine a lead in the fourth and they scored in every subsequent inning until the eighth, when the Sargents figuratively hit the well-known skids and went to pieces.

Murray Hits Homer

"Punk" Murray's circuit blow to open the fifth did much to break the morale of the Barnett-led squad. Murray having a single to his credit also. Caulin and Sero collected a brace of timely hits, one of Caulin's being a double with one aboard. Both of Sero's hits came when the bases were well populated. Barrigan had a double and single and Bushell with a brace of one base blows counted the majority of hits for the losers, the latter's single in the ninth driving in two of the Sargents' three runs.

Luffman was given splendid support on the home diamond as the "cementmen" played a great defensive game, only one error and three, but his control was all that could be asked for as only two walks and two hits afforded the losers while at bat. Wildness on the part of Lockmen pitchers Sopwith who walked an even half dozen and errors when the Point Anne boys proved costly to the losers. Some exceptionally good fielding was exemplified by the Point" winners, however, who counted one every hit that came their way as they out-hit the "lockmen" ten to eight.

Phillies Impressive on Road Winning Six of Ten Played But Generally Lose at Home

Yankees Increase Lead by Defeating Chicago Four Straight

GIANTS WIN

Red Sox Extend Winning Streak To Ten Games

(By Sid Feder)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Ask any National League pitcher to describe an egg crate, and the answer, time time out of ten, will be the Phillies Ball Park.

"You can stand at home plate in that shoebox", is the general reply, "and pretty near throw from first base over that short right field wall. The boundaries are so close that when you get up there to pitch, you haven't got room for your windup. Any pitcher who gets by there deserves the congressional medal."

That's the reason the Phils are playing cellar ball at home in the National League and show nearly a first division record on the road. It also explains why the loop's pitchers would rather take a salary cut than work in Baker Bowl, and why two of the better flingers, Bucky Walters and Rookie Lefty Leaman, each have better than .500 averages on the road than this season, and get their ears knocked off more often than not in Philadelphia.

Phillies Good on Road

In the ten games they've played on their current road trip, they've won six. Even the Phils' ability to take two in a row from the League leading Cubs since June 29 hasn't been started it against the pace-setters in Chicago with a seven-hitter Wednesday. Yesterday Walters tied the Cubs bats in knots, allowed just four hits and finished on top 4-3, to make his season record nine victories and four losses away from home, compared to three wins and six setbacks in Philadelphia.

Yesterday's whipping cut the Cubs' lead to five games as the second-place Giants outlasted the Cincinnati Reds to take a 2-0 decision in 10 innings.

Gehrig Finds Range

Iron-horse Lou Gehrig found the range with a pair of homers, and the Yankees swept their four-game series with the Chicago White Sox and stretched their American League lead to nine full games with a 13-8 decision. Jake Powell was sent to the hospital after being tagged by Ace of Steele Bingham's fast ones.

The Red Sox staggered through with a 5-4 edge over the Indians, thereby extending their streak to 10 games straight. Hank Greenberg's homer gave the Tigers a 5-3 win over the Browns, while the Browns belted the Senators 7-4.

Brooklyn's Dodgers made it two in a row for the Pirates by a 9-8 margin. Danny MacFayden, tight in the pinch, relieved Van Mungo to a 4-1 win over the Cardinals.

Yesterday's Stars

(By The Associated Press)

Lou Gehrig, Yankees—Hit two homers driving in runs in 13-8 win over White Sox.

Bucky Walters, Phillies—Stopped Cubs 4-3 with four hits.

Buck Newsom, Red Sox—Fanned five and allowed eight hits in beating Indians 5-4.

Hank Greenberg, Tigers—His homer in eighth with two on beat Athletics 5-3.

RAWDON TITLE WON BY BETHEL

Faulkner Trophy Goes To Winner After Five Game Set

Stirling, Aug. 6 (Special)—Climaxing their tenth play-off game of the season, Bethel ultimately clinched the championship of the Rawdon Softball League and the Faulkner Cup. Lateness in the season was perhaps largely responsible for the number of games necessary to decide the semi-final and final play-offs, several games being incompleted because of darkness. Bethel won finally the winning factor in the final game for the rivals of the championship were four runs up, when the game was again called on account of darkness.

Game Reverted to Fifth

Springbrook started the series as favorites and took the first two games of a best three out of five games quite handily. But Bethel came back strong and after several attempts completed two games and the two wins gave the series the fifth game. The managers, previous to the final game, had decided that if time permitted seven innings would be played, but as darkness made playing impossible the game would be based on the standing at the end of the fifth inning.

The Game

Bethel started in strong, going to bat first and scoring in the first inning by four runs, getting five hits from Strodworth. Springbrook got four runs from Richman on three hits and three of them scored. Heath started off for the Bethel crew in the second with a homer and Sutherland got a home on the next ball pitched. Bethel scored seven times in this inning and three was the best Springbrook could do with Brodsworth getting a homer. The third was scoreless and in the fourth Bethel got two and Springbrook five. They each got one in the fifth to make the score 14 to 12 for Bethel.

With the hope of completing the seven innings they went into the sixth but Bethel added two more runs. Springbrook began to hit Rickman as will in their half of the inning but the Bethel nine held their rivals with a flurry of hits which had proved their undoing. Excitement. Eight runners crossed the plate before the side in the field could be got some 20 to 16 in their favour. The game seemed to be all Bethel but by this time it was too dark to continue and Umpire Hawkins declared the game and a lengthy discussion took place followed by a meeting of league officials in Stirling on Friday when it was decided that the game at the end of the fifth inning would be accepted as final and the championship went to Bethel.

Teams

Springbrook—G. Heath, M. Heath G. Broadworth, M. Gibson, C. Thompson, G. Williams, D. Sharp, Strodworth, C. Heath.

Bethel—Bill Heath, Bill Sutherland, M. McKeown, Rickman, B. Morton, E. Rumnels, W. Warren, G. Green, Doug. Richardson.

Batteries—Brown, Butler and Whitby.

There is considerable criticism being voiced around regarding the indifference being shown to various sports and activities in general in Belleville. It looks as though the city at large big forgotten the honors and advertising medium afforded this city through past sporting accomplishments, be they what they were.

The following reference to the sponsoring of play, recently published in the Toronto Globe, is well worth repeating and read as follows—What truer opinion can you get of any person than to play with him? What waste to play golf with the man, who cannot count? How many bridge games are wrecked by sulkiness and intolerance? What truer picture can you get of those values of play than the relation they bear to delinquency? Numerous social ills could be cured and authorities routed to show that the well-supervised playground means, the right handicapped, a reduction in juvenile delinquency by up to 48 per cent." The question remains, do we want more playgrounds and healthy youths or more jails?

Dennis McCarthy in a few well chosen words says:

Give them a place for innocent sport.

Give them a chance for fun.

Better the playground plot than a court.

And a jail when the harm is done.

Give them a chance—if you stint them now,

Tomorrow you'll have to pay.

A larger bill for a darker ill,

So give them a place to play."

Although the Belleville-Trenton Rovers have only three more league games to play, the result of Wednesday night's 32 to 6 reverse has the Moore-Delaney crowd out on the well known limb, insofar as their previous plans and calculations were concerned. In the Central Ontario Lacrosse League play-off the team finishing last gets the third placed club while the second and fourth teams are battling it out in a similar series, with the two ultimate winners finally meeting. The Rovers were aiming at the second hole, so as to meet Norwood, but Oshawa seems to have a strangle hold on that berth now. Now the question confronts the Rovers whether they go to Smith's Falls fourth and meet Oshawa or third and have to meet Lindsay in the Peterboro Auburns? For their two remaining home games on one of Oshawa and the Rovers with Peterboro, the Rovers are negotiating for the Queen Alexandra at Wellington Arena. Incidentally the C. O. L. play-offs will not get under way until after the Peterboro Fair. The C.O.L.L. standing to date reads:

Peterborough	11	0
Oshawa	9	4
Belleville-Trenton	6	6
Norwood	4	9
Cobourg	0	11

Wonder what the membership for the Belleville Rugby Football Club is progressing? There should be no great amount of trouble experienced to soliciting membership for a Football Club in Belleville, providing the proper approach is made and through the proper channels. Incidentally George Laughlin, physical instructor at the Belleville Collegiate, informs us the B.C.I. and Y.S. may not appear with the C.O.S.S.A. this coming semester. Too much expense for the honors that can be attained.

The so-called underdogs seem to be tops in the South Hastings League play-offs these days as the third placed Latta nine winning their first play-off game over the Cannifton "Killers" 12 to 9 yesterday and right on the Cannifton diamond. The Cannifton team won their first dozen games without a loss, then dropped into a losing streak and haven't won a game in three starts. A mighty poor time to hit a slump, when the play-offs are on. The "Killers" boosted the ball for more errors than the scorers could tabulate. It would be a strange state of affairs if the fourth placed clubs of the regular schedule, Stirling and Latta, should eventually finish in the finals. Yesterday's game saw plenty of hitting and many miscues.

The Bell-Sargents blew-up in their second game with the Point Anne crew and lost 10 to 3 to the 'Ox Point' gang. A few errors paved the way for Eddie Schreiber, ultimate replacement while Stan Luffman coasted through in fine style for the victors. All hail to the "Cementmen", The 'Ox Point' Jacks remain the hostilities at Coleman Flats tonight.

The Peterboro Football Club held its annual election of officers the week and have hit upon a novel idea whereby to raise funds to assist in the pre-season training of their club. They are putting on a raffle car for the benefit of the motor or the choice of a boat a trailer. It is estimated that the costs well over $50.00 to equip a football player. It's considerably more considerable expense to outfit 20 or 24 players. Of course with the Petes' present backing they can negotiate the possibilities of the Oshawa winning the Allan Shore group of the O.R.F.U. why not save all clubs concerned the expense of equipping and have the winner on the other hand, we've heard tell of those prepaid passes for championship series be prepared for an argument Cecil, mine boy.

We're gratified were many local baseball fans with the showing of the Kiwanis Juniors and the Y.M.C.A. nine on Wednesday afternoon that a large delegation of Belleville fans hiked their way to Forbere to take in the second struggle and it's certainly to the credit of Harry Bickler's nine if the kids can repeat, but perhaps that's too much to expect.

SALUTE to Love

By Rachel Mack
© 1937 NEA Service Inc.

It was a comfort, she found, to be escorted to the family pew by Johnnie. After all, he had been rather attentive to her once and she had been fond of him, before Morgan had supplanted him.

"Could I," she wondered, while Johnnie's good tenor voice rang out over a hymn book, "manage to catch him again?.... And could I fall for him if I did? It would ease my pride..... Johnnie's my kind. Not a genius, either.....

Yet when, that night, Johnnie came driving out to Rickety House bringing Jane Chenault, and two young men and melons enough for a party, Kate felt no elation. "Here I am," Johnnie's eyes told her, "ready to begin again, where we left off—ready to step into Morgan's shoes."

While the others arranged themselves on pillows on the porch floor, Kate and Johnnie walked down the star-lit road. "I've always had a weakness for country roads in the dark," he said. "What smells so sweet?"

"August lilies," Kate told him. "There's a clump in Room just over by the door. Don't pay any attention to them. They'd make a rock sentimental."

Johnnie lit a cigarette and said huskily, "I could get that way if you'd let me—easy."

"Some other time, Johnnie," Kate said quickly. "Not tonight. Let's just be jolly tonight. Let's make limericks, the way we used to."

"Limericks!" Johnnie protested. "Why did I ever let myself a reputation for those things? A horse neighed in the pasture. Was that Bonny Boy?" Johnnie wanted to know.

"No," Kate replied shortly. "Go on, Johnnie. Make one about—King Carol of Rumania."

Johnnie looked up at the stars, inhaled deeply, consulted them slowly and obediently:

"Yes Carol is a dear and saber Reviewing his army. What labor He never fatigues us, In fact, he's a darling Us."

And so does his red-headed neighbor."

Kate applauded. "That's the gem of your career, Johnnie! I'll write it down in my book tonight, along with your others. I did a pretty good one myself last week. Listen to this——"

X X X

The old game was on, and Kate kept the star-lit walk down the dark lane free from sentiment. It was not until they were entering the yard that Johnnie said quickly, "I meant to tell you, Kate—I'll take Morgan's place if you'll let me. If you feel the need of somebody, I mean, to fetch and carry for you——"

Kate felt a surge of gratitude at the sincere, faithful way in which Johnnie was trying to readjust their relationship, disposing of Morgan, yet not ignoring him. She answered, "Thank you, Johnnie. A girl does need someone occasionally. I'm not in love with Morgan any more, but I'll miss him. He was a swell beau."

"But a squirrel, Kate!" It was an old long experience, and Morgan trails better left unspoken.

"Just a squirrel," Kate agreed. She said it decisively, as that Morgan Prentiss stood tried and convicted in the court of her own conscience.

Johnnie Baird, in the week that followed, did not conceal the fact that he was renewing his courtship. He was a lavish contributor to the ballad type of song. The closed car, the top down, the out-of-doors, so an amplifier will help you on wolfums. One other matter. Will you wear the 1850 watered-silk party gown that your grandmother wore to a party? Or is the historical exhibit? It would add a great deal to the interest and colorfulness of your song. Let me hear it, you immediately, in the dress isn't essential, but your presence on the program is. We're going to call a bebe. Hopefully, Jane Ainsworth.

X X X

Tomato canning was suspended while they caught Clarence. "Can't anything be couldn't!" Caroline protested. "My Alice is too little—"

"Alice is not little," your voice is all right. At least the amplifier will make it all right. You'll take part, too!"

Caroline continued to protest, "I haven't practised since we've been without a piano——" But she half-closed her eyes and began to sing the old song experimentally.

"There goes my heart unbalanced when she had finished. It was a sort of verdict, for the old woman was not a born critic.

"All you need is a little polishing," Caroline told them.

Caroline left them and went up to the store room. Half an hour later she came down smudged with dust and carrying a music book.

"I've found Foster songs," she said, "but I can't locate the ones I've looked everywhere. Do you remember, Kate, where Grandmother kept the horn?"

Kate tried to think back. "It was wrapped in blue tissue paper," she recalled, "and then laid in a pale-boxed box. The box was tied with red silk cord with tassels knotted. I can see it as plain as day."

"Yes," Caroline agreed, "so can I. That's where I'm looking for, but I can't find it."

Kate changed the dress to me. I'm a good retriever. I can accompany to the committee and look for it later. Go write your acceptance to the committee and take it to town by mail. Take your music with you, too. Go to Cynthia's. Her piano always in tune."

After Caroline had gone Kate spent the long hot afternoon looking for the dress. At first hastily. Then methodically. Finally frantically.

Around 5 o'clock she threw herself on the bed, panted. The dress was simply not in the house. Where was it then? Where was the box tied with the red silk cord, the cord with the tasseled ends? Suddenly she knew. It was in the small cedarish trunk. And the cedar-skin trunk must have been left at Mead Meadows.

For a time she considered this. She herself had helped empty the attic when they moved. She had chosen some things to be burned, other things to be put on the sale. She had entrusted both consignments to Zeke and his helper.....Just before the garret was completely emptied she had found that stack of Godey's style books and had pounced upon them excitedly. That had caused her to suggest the little doeskin trunk be bound one of the chimneys, though she ran out to the mail box and returned with the letter. "It's for me, Wait—I'll open it. Oh, it's from Miss Ainsworth on the Foster committee." She read it aloud, after the first few words through it.

"Dear Caroline: We should like to have you sing for us at the Stephen Collins Foster celebration in Bardstown next Friday, as our county's contribution to the occasion. frankly, Mary Stokes was to have been the Shelby representative, but she has gone to Reno. I've been called to Arizona by her brother's illness. She had chosen to sing "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming." As this has been announced on the program committee, we shall ask you to sing this number. Will you avoid confusion? I am taking it for granted that you will do this for us. Your voice is clear and its nicely adapted to the ballad type of song. The celebration is in June, will be out-of-doors, so an amplifier will help you on volume. One other matter. Will you wear the 1850 watered-silk party gown that your grandmother wore to a party? Or is the historical exhibit? It would add a great deal to the interest and colorfulness of your song. Let me hear from you immediately, as the dress isn't essential, but your presence on the program is. We're going to call a bebe. Hopefully, Jane Ainsworth.

Tomato canning was suspended while they caught Clarence. "Can't anything be couldn't!" Caroline protested. "My Alice is too little—"

"Alice is not little," your voice is all right. At least the amplifier will make it all right. You'll take part, too!"

Caroline continued to protest, "I haven't practised since we've been without a piano——" But she half-closed her eyes and began to sing the old song experimentally.

There goes my heart unbalanced when she had finished. It was a sort of verdict, for the old woman was not a born critic.

"All you need is a little polishing," Caroline told them.

Caroline left them and went up to the store room. Half an hour later she came down smudged with dust and carrying a music book.

"I've found Foster songs," she said, "but I can't locate the ones I've looked everywhere. Do you remember, Kate, where Grandmother kept the horn?"

Kate tried to think back. "It was wrapped in blue tissue paper," she recalled, "and then laid in a pale-boxed box. The box was tied with red silk cord with tassels knotted. I can see it as plain as day."

"Yes," Caroline agreed. "so can I. That's where I'm looking for, but I can't find it."

Kate changed the dress to me. I'm a good retriever. I can accompany to the committee and look for it later. Go write your acceptance to the committee and take it to town by mail. Take your music with you, too. Go to Cynthia's. Her piano always in tune."

She got up, balked and dressed with the mechanical precision which purposeful anger can produce. She put on riding clothes. She went to the stable and saddled Queen and rode to Mead Meadows. She clamounted at the yard gate and tied Queen to the fence. Then she crossed the lawn and knocked the house. She had no plans, no idea of what she would do next. She was impelled merely by a jumbled sense of daring and a resentful determination to seize what was her own.

The front of the house was closed, every window shuttered and blankly against the heat of the day. Kate skirted the house to the right and came to the side porch with its mailed vines of honeysuckle. She saw that the house door stood open and the screen unlatched. She paused through it and stopped in the hall.

An utter silence pervaded the house. Kate laid her hand on the stair rail and looked up. The treads seemed to beckon. How dusty! A filar was this little stairway! It was not as wide as the front stairs and as steep at the back. It was carpeted with a worn brussels strip which had been there when she could remember..... There was nothing to keep her from going up so she went, not pausing until she had reached the attic under the eaves.

Kate looked about her. Over the entire floor beads were drying on neatly spread newspapers, but there was no furniture. The rich disorder of other days had been replaced by a stark neatness which was foreign to the place. Even the windows, still curtained in ancient lace, had been pushed back, and the worn rafters of the sloping roof seemed the same as they always had, played there as a child, listening to the rain on the roof.

Four large chimneys cut through the attic, two flush with the outer walls, two passing through the room itself. It was behind one of these that Kate found the little trunk. She gave a cry of relief and satisfaction and started to draw it across the room to the window, then thought better of it. Boldness was getting place to panic. She only wanted now was to find the box and get away unobserved.

X X X

She remembered that her grandmother had kept her sewing and her machine in a tin box somewhere near the big brick chimney. The attic was always in twilight. Hopefully she looked for the tin box now, and found it. A tallow candle and one match lay in it. Carefully she struck the match on a chimney brick and lighted the candle. When the match burned steadily she fastened it to the flook with drippings of tallow. They also supplied the lid of the little trunk.

The tin box, tied with the red silk cord, the only thing in the trunk. She lifted it out and untied the cord. Inside, wrapped in blue tissue paper. The dress!

Kate stood and held it from her. It was an ivory-white silk that she remembered. A myriad of wrinkles traversed it. The bodice was cut in a deep vee from its full skirt, but otherwise it was a handsome gown, suitable for a costume in an old picture. The neckline drooped off shoulder. There were rose-bud garlands on the skirt.

Kate pictured Caroline in the dress. Caroline's waist was small, though not quite small enough for this. They'd have to let the lining out somehow, for Caroline couldn't if she was pinched..... The length would be just right, Caroline was very near a rose in her hair and carry an old fan.....

Suddenly she was down on her steps in the stairs. In that instant she realized the gravity of the situation, her utter folly in coming here like a thief in the night. She was a rose in her hair and carry an old fan.....

Suddenly she was down on her steps in the stairs. On the attic stairs. In that instant she realized the gravity of the situation, her utter folly in coming here like a thief in the night. She was a rose in her hair and carry an old fan.....

As all trapped animals do, she looked around for a way of escape. But there was no way out, she knew, except by that door. Should she face him? In the moment that remained she made a cowardly decision. She extinguished the candle, the chimney and stood quite still.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The steps came nearer. Not hurried, but deliberate and purposeful..... And then the man himself was in the room.

Kate, flat against the bricks, eyes closed, was thinking. "They must be a nightmare! I can't have gotten myself into a mess like this!".....But she had. And now she opened her eyes to look into the terrified face of Jeff Howard, Who had stepped around the chimney with the relentless instinct of a hunter on a hare's trail.

"Well!" he said shortly, "so it's you! I might have known."

"Why might you?" Kate replied with spirit.

"Because you can't keep off my property. What do you want this time?"

"Something I left here," Kate answered. "I couldn't found it. I'll take it now and leave."

"Where is it?" he asked.

"It's mine, I tell you. The whole trunkful mine."

"Then why do you come sneakin' up here like a house-breaker? Because you're a Blue-blooded tactics, I reckon?"

Kate flared at his voice and the justice of his accusation maddened her. She could not bear to have him think her a thief in the wrong. She felt despised and humiliated. Her head was high and short laugh, "You'd have preferred to have me openly ransacked your ging for it, of course. That's typical of you!"

"Typical of what, then?" the person who comes up from nothing to be somethin'?"

"You'd like to have money yourself," he retorted, striving to control his own burn. "Why can't you be a sport about this business?"

"I'm not envious of your money," she flung at him. "I gotten my own house and land. Your horse, even. I'm not envious of anything you have. You think you've gotten Mead Meadows, don't you? Well, you've only got its present. Its history belongs to my family."

"Your family," he remarked. "Well, the blood's run out, I reckon. You're a poor sport, Kate, cheerful old sot and a couple of lazy girls. He did put down a mean instrument of surprise and rage. "I'm about to give the whole thing to charity, and I'll give any old ghosts that haunt it. I'm through with it!"

Kate laughed. "I'll take Mead Meadows to Howard's Place. Furthermore, I'm pleased to put some of the family heirlooms in it."

X X X

They did not know that, as they looked at each other, seeking words to express their anger, the candle had turned over and consume the tissue paper from the trunk. The flames of their fury anger were too intoxicating to let them perceive the little licking flames that shot along the floor, eating into the papers spread there. It was the smell of the parching dried beans that made them see fire. The flames of hunger in a fed silence, Kate spoke first.

"Here! Put out the fire!"

TWENTY YEARS OF GASTRIC TROUBLE

Blackburn Brand Stomach Powder Brought Relief

Gastric Trouble is the forerunner of pneumonia. But Blackburn Brand Stomach Powder gives equal benefit to all.

"I have suffered from Gastric trouble for quite twenty years on and off," writes Mrs. Lewis, a lady of Clarence. "having been in hospital many times for treatment, but after leaving hospital I was bound to keep strictly to milk diet—but now, since taking Blackburn Brand Stomach Powder I can eat quite a lot of food that I dared not touch before."

Remember this: It was the powder with the signature "ALEX. C. MACLEAN" on the bottle, that relieved Mrs. Lewis. That's the one you want; the one in bottles is carious. Never sold loose. 1098

In Sport you are Courteous— Try Courtesy in Driving

COURTESY and fair play are the very spirit of sport and sportsmen. Both "the gallery" and the contestants, and that includes nearly everybody, demand fair play.

But are you still "a good sport" when you are driving a car, truck or motorcycle? Do you still mete out fair play to your fellow-motorist by allowing him his rights and by not exacting your own when it is dangerous to do so? Do you keep well to the right side of the road, except when you pass the other fellow, and then do so at a safe distance after sounding your horn? Do you hand-signal your intention to slow down, stop or change direction? Do you refrain at all times from "pocketing", crowding or otherwise inconveniencing your fellow-motorists?

When every motorist can answer "yes" to all such questions then we can look forward to a great reduction in our shocking accident toll.

I earnestly request that you do your part and "Try Courtesy" every inch of the way.

HAND OF CENSOR FELT ON PHOTOGRAPH FROM NORTHERN CHINA

Censorship on news and photographs has already begun in northern China, where Japanese troops and Chinese forces have had several skirmishes. This photograph taken in northern China shows Japanese troops on their way to the "front". The censor, in passing the photograph at Tokio before shipment to Canada, left out the name of the city, presumably to make identification difficult. The photo is one of the first to come from the "war area."

Casey was puffing as he ran from Glusburg's grocery after the futile chase of a slim figure through the dim alleys of the Ninth ward.

He lifted the telephone from its hook in the call box intending to report the incident when his free ear caught the faint shout:

"Help!"

He whirled as the desk sergeant answered his call, saw a distant form bundled on the sidewalk, and slapping up the hammers hurried as fast as his weight allowed.

He saw a woman there. Her face, pretty and glowing palely in the night light, was raised in pain. She was trying to speak and he bent toward the whispering lips.

"Holy Mickael!" he exclaimed, and forthwith butted in the door of a closed store before which she lay, and carried her in.

The desk sergeant sent around one of the night patrol cars after Casey's sudden breaking of the connection with the Grimm street post. They found Casey in his trousers and underwear, recalling a slim book knowledge about his work. He was wrapping a pinkish, new-born baby in his shirt and coat, leaping from child to mother on the floor and yelling enough to burst a lung, for some help.

The captain sent a relief man to Casey's post and he went to the hospital with mother and baby in the ambulance the policeman had called.

And there was the strange spectacle of big, genial Jim Casey, himself a bachelor, nervously striding over the cold marble of the waiting room floor while white-clad doctors ministered to mother and child.

He wore an old overcoat one of his brother officers had pulled from the back of the car. A doctor came into the room. He was smiling in the friendly, assured manner of speaking to a man who has just endured the strain of becoming a father.

"Congratulations, sir. It's a boy."

Casey looking at him curiously, then laughed aloud. "I'm a cop on the beat, Doc, and this was an emergency," he explained. He held back the coat to show little more of a uniform than police suspenders.

"Oh, sorry. If that's the case, please give us a report, Officer. I had an idea that you were the father".

"Foster father, suggested Casey, grinning. "Sure, I'll give 'em a report and tell the little lady—well, just mention I'm glad it was a boy." Then Casey filled some forms and went out.

He expanded his chest and turning into Grimm street came upon a thin little man hurrying in the manner of Ninth warders when they do not see a policeman but likewise do not want to.

Casey dismissed baby and mother from his mind as he recognized the figure. It was the shadow on Glusburg's alley.

He reached out a big hand as the other came close. "Pull a minute, son," he said, "let's talk a while."

There was an instant look of fright which seemed somewhat lessened on seeing Casey's informal dress.

"Sorry, sir," he replied hastily. "I'm really in a great rush."

"Maybe," said Casey, not missing the significance of the other's stark, "but I'm really a police-man."

"Oh!" It was a gasp, almost a moan.

That was enough for Casey. He tightened his grip on the others collar and led him up the street. "Y'know," he said, "it's still considered a crime to break into other people's places."

"But I didn't steal a thing, officer, I swear I didn't."

"You were going to," retorted Casey.

They had reached the street call box and Casey opened the door with one of the keys he drew from his pocket. The man turned under his grasp and looked at him with pleading eyes.

"Please," he begged hoarsely, "don't call them until I find my wife."

Casey held his hand from the instrument, doubtfully. The mother and baby popped back into his mind.

"I gotta find her," pleading his prisoner, "she's little, with a pale face and dark eyes, dressed in blue."

"With white dots," said Casey softly.

The man turned full on him and Casey's grip relaxed on the collar.

"Where is she? Where is she?" he cried.

Casey looked sternly at him. "Now, where did you get a job at Glusburg's grocery?"

"Nothing! Nothing! Where is my wife, you—"

"You admit you broke in?" questioned Casey relentlessly.

"Oh, I'll admit anything. I never stole a thing in my life but she had to eat and I've gotta find her. Man, she's going to have a baby!"

The big officer closed and locking the box. "Son," he said calmly, "it's a boy and she's all right and being taken care of in the General hospital, but I want to tell you—"

He never finished the sentence for his recent prisoner was already racing down the street and Casey grinned broadly.

"That's always a good name for a kid," he said thoughtfully and hopefully in the direction of the most unemotional of police call boxes.

Policemen are like that, even bachelors.

WALL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 6—(AP)—With the exception of mining and special issues, stocks displayed a sensible lack of buying power in today's market.

Stocks and motors were unable to get going under trading forces adopted in earlier altitudes toward most leaders. Utilities and rails were under rather the greatest part of the time. Trends were indecisive near the final hour. Transfers were around 750,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE (Close)

Toronto, Aug. 6 (CP)—Trading in the base metal stocks continued on a substantial scale today and the close was higher for all active issues of the group while the list was mainly firm in the golds and industrials and the western oils were moderately weak and dull. Volume was the heaviest of the week.

Consolidated Mining and Smelting pushed along 2 points to 85 1-2 and Noranda added a point or more while Nickle an Hudson Bay had fractional gains. Trading in heavy volume Pend Oreille advanced 25 cents and Coast Copper was up about the same amount. Smaller gains appeared for Base Metals Corporation, Sherritt-Gordon, Whitewater, Normetal, Sherritt and Wable-Antoine. Ventures fell back a few cents. Mining Corporation pulled along with the base metal, holding a gain of about 20 cents around 3.50. Treadwell-Yukon added 15.

Canada Steamship Lines was in demand and the Commons firmed 1-2, while the Preferred was up about a point. Bell Telephone, Brazilian and Winnipeg Electric A closed on the up side. Steel of Canada, Dominion Bridge, Dominion Steel Car, Lobiaw A and Westons registered improvement.

MARKET COMMENT

Martin-Bird Crosscut Shows Ore Grade

Martin-Bird Gold Mines reports new ore encouragement in development on the 250-ft. level. A crosscut south of the main drive to expose indications previously secured in diamond drilling from surface, has intersected a 10-ft. width assaying $16, Drifting will start immediately. On the first level a lateral drill hole has intersected one foot running $40 at a point 12 feet south of the drift. A crosscut is being taken out to have a look at this occurrence.

Raising of the No. 2 shaft from the 125-ft. level has broken through to the surface. As soon as this shaft is connected through to the 275-ft. level a start will be made on deepening the No. 1 shaft below the 375-ft. level.

Sylvanite at 586 Tons Daily This Fall

The plan of Sylvanite to increase the milled tonnage rate from the current rate of 450 tons to 500 tons is likely to be completed this fall. Delivery of some new mill equipment has been slower than was anticipated, but everything is under order now.

Shareholders were told at the annual meeting that a mill increase was under consideration so as to allow the management to utilize to better advantage the lower grades of ore found in development work and at the same time maintain production at about the same level as last year.

The new 720 orebody, stressed in the report at the meeting, now shows an ore length of 100 ft. in three short shoots. The same ore is being entered on the 460-ft. level but work on the vein is being stopped pending the arrangement of facilities to take care of waste rock from exploration in that part of the property, almost a half mile from the shaft. The 720 ore body is the most northerly ore so far opened up in drifting, though a diamond drill intersection indicates still another vein 50 ft. or more farther north.

New Centrocle Pending For Canadian Dredge

Operations of Canadian Dredge and Dock Co. Ltd., in the current year to date are reported as satisfactory and the outlook for the future of the company appears to be more promising in view of the many works of considerable importance which are expected to be undertaken shortly. Among the latter, contemplated improvements in the ports of Toronto and Hamilton are the most sanguine prospects for the company. The Toronto scheme is associated with ambitious plans for airport facilities and the anticipated share which, the company may have in the development should be of material importance.

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 6—Local produce markets had an easier tone yesterday, prices turning down on butter, cheese and potatoes, with some shading going on also in eggs. Butter receipts were fairly large, the increasing Ottawa announcement of stocks in nine leading cities as 27,005,972 lbs., against 26,783,763 lbs. on the same date last year. Receipts were 161 cases of butter, 1,283 boxes of cheese, excluding truck arrivals.

Sales on the Canadian Commodity Exchange were 400 boxes of Quebec fresh 92 score butter at 26 1-2c.

The cheese market was around 14 3-8c for westerns and 13 5-8c for easterns.

On the egg market there was talk of lower levels in some buying circles but most sales were reported at 30c for A-large, 28c for A-medium 23c for B and 21c for C.

The potato market was 75c for No. 1, and 50-60c for No. 2, new Quebec stock, per 80-lb. bags.

JAPANESE ORDER ALL NATIONALS OUT OF HANKOW

Japs Are Apprehensive For Safety of Citizens Colony to be Abandoned

Chinese Forces Said to be Concentrated in Region

EVACUATION CONTINUES

Consul-General Advises All Americans to Places of Safety

Hankow, China, Aug. 7 (AP)—Japanese naval and consular officials today ordered evacuation of all Japanese in this important commercial city and international treaty port at the confluence of the Yangtze and Han Rivers.

The Japanese officials, reportedly acting on orders from Tokyo, decreed all Japanese nationals must quit Hankow before noon Sunday leaving administration of Japanese concession to Chinese authorities.

Although Hankow is hundreds of miles south of the Northern China hostilities, Japanese have expressed apprehension for the safety of her citizens in China since American, and that large bodies of Chinese soldiery were concentrated in the region.

Other cities along the Yangtze waterway to the sea have been evacuated by the Japanese as a precautionary measure.

Abandon Colony.

The order meant the remaining Japanese community numbering several hundred persons and an estimated 400 marines and soldiers, would board ship for the coast in an unparalleled abandonment of a long-established colony here.

Evacuation proceeded at Hankow and 600 Japanese departed this morning and a number of the remaining Japanese were concentrated on the river waiting evacuation down the river.

It was reported the United States Consul-General had advised all Americans in the part of his consular district above the Yellow River to withdraw to places of safety.

The report came soon after official information in Tientsin that the Japanese campaign might extend to all Chinese territory north of the river advised that foreigners in the vast region should be warned.

Silver Candelabra Made in Year 1842 Goes into Archives

Ottawa, Aug. 7 (CP)—The public archives of Canada announced last night it had received the gift of a solid silver candelabra, made in 1842 and presented to Hon. William Morris, member of the Legislative Council of Canada.

The gift was made by Miss Elizabeth Phillips of Toronto, in accordance with the wishes of the gentleman's grandfather, William Morris, who died in 1856.

Hon. Morris was prominent in the public life of Upper Canada from 1820 until his death in 1856. He was particularly outstanding as a champion of the Church of Scotland in Canada.

HEAVY DAMAGE NEAR HAMILTON FROM RAINSTORM

High Level Bridge Believed Undermined And Badly Damaged

ALL OVER WEST PART

Brantford, Woodstock And Other Cities Felt Brunt of Storm

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 7 (CP)—Southwestern Ontario today surveyed damage wrought by a heavy rainstorm that swept the district early last night. Residents in many parts of the city mopped up their cellars, while officials examined the high level bridge at the city's western outskirts to determine how badly it was undermined.

Railway gangs were clearing the Canadian National Railways main line near Bayview where tons of sand were carried down over the tracks and for hours interrupted traffic on the C.N.R. and the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo line.

A London-bound train which left here at seven p.m. and the Buffalo-bound 7:31 and 8 passenger from Toronto due here at 8.45 p.m. were delayed and finally re-routed across Hamilton beach to Stoney Creek and via the Port Dover line over the Mountain.

The cloudburst extended through the Niagara peninsula, inundating highways as deep in low spots. At Stratford it was extremely heavy. A street car and a tranzferer were hit by lightning there and many cellars were flooded.

Tons of Sand Washed Away.

About 2,000 tons of sand was washed across the Longwood and old Guelph roads under the high level bridge on the highway coming into Hamilton from the west. The rain partly undermined the huge structure and traffic guards warned motorists to proceed with caution.

Mayor Jackson of Stoney Creek Byers was brought safely to the Hamilton Aero Club at the height of the storm. The Flood Control Dam at St. Catharines, who was following Byers, was forced down in a field near Caledonia, Ont. In the bay nine motor boats were upset, but their passengers rescued.

In the city several streets were closed when basements guarded back spots after hundreds of cars were stalled. Hamilton was one of the most heavily tased since it was put in ten years ago.

Brantford got a taste of the storm, too, but a welcome one. There it was reported hail stones that had sent the mercury to 86 and was blamed as a contributing factor to two deaths.

Gananoque, Onti., Aug. 7—(CP)—A United States plane "bombed" the steamer "Champion" Thursday night made a daring dash on the forecdeck, but the "bomb" turned out to b a love-letter addressed from the flyer to a Toronto girl passenger enroute home aboard the steamer.

Passengers on the boat had been somewhat frightened for a few minutes around the Lower Duck Island light when Ross Carnegie, Kingston, who delivered it to the girl, a member of Commissioner J. J. Weldon's party, Clayton, Ont.

CONSERVATIVES TO HEAR DECISION OF THEIR LEADER

Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett to Meet Party Members in Ottawa Today

TO REPORT HEALTH

Sought Advice of European Specialists on Trip to Connection

Ottawa, Aug. 7 (CP) — Exactly seven years after Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett was sworn in as Prime Minister of Canada, Conservatives in all parts of Canada looked to a meeting of their representatives in parliament today for word as to the future of the party.

Summoned by Mr. Bennett, Conservative members of the House of Commons met to hear whether he wishes to carry the mantle of leadership and retire from politics or continue and prepare to lead the party against Prime Minister Mackenzie King and his Liberal following the next general election.

Mr. Bennett's health, indifferent since the serious illness he passed through at the eve of the 1935 election is a major factor in whatever decision may be reached. Before leaving Canada for the Coronation last May Mr. Bennett informed his followers in the House he would take the advice of British and European specialists on his health and be guided by their advice as to his future in public life.

Seven Ten Years Ago.

It is now nearly ten years since Mr. Bennett was first elected leader of the Conservative party. In 1927 a national convention at Winnipeg placed upon him the mantle of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Robert Borden and Arthur Meighen.

Three years later he led the party to a smashing victory in the general election of 1930.

The general election of 1935 brought the Liberal party back into power with the largest majority in history and left Mr. Bennett leader of the opposition with the small following of 39 members.

Why the Weather?

(By Major A. H. Thiessen)

Science Service Meteorologist in Charge.

What makes the weather? In this country, there are about 1,000 observers, scientifically trained, maintained through the Civil Service, and stationed at about 200 observatories, who take complete weather observations twice or more daily for the primal purpose of weather forecasting. In addition there are 2,000 citizens, men and women, who, under supervision, take and compile observations once daily for the primal purpose of climatic records. These are all splendidly organized by the United States Weather Bureau. These are the watchers. They measure the weather elements from the earth's surface to higher than any airplane can soar. All these watchers work to make all our activities more efficient and safe.

THE WEATHER

TORONTO, Aug. 7—A shallow disturbance is centred this morning over Alabama, with pressure 29.80 inches, on the Pacific coast in the middle Arctic and over the middle Atlantic coast. The weather has been unsettled and showery in Ontario and westward to the Maritime Provinces with thunderstorms and local heavy rains and comparatively cool. Elsewhere it has been fair with light to moderate winds. Minimum and maximum temperatures:

Lake Superior—Moderate southerly winds; mainly fair and warm today and Sunday, moderately variable winds; partly cloudy and local thunderstorms.

Manitoba—Fair, cloudy and comparatively cool today and Sunday, probably light showers.

Saskatchewan and Alberta — Partly cloudy and unsettled today and Sunday, probably light showers and thunderstorms, mostly fair and moderately warm.

SCHOOL FORGOTTEN AS SPANISH BOYS WORK

Sons in Spain are not having an easy job while their fathers are at the front fighting the Spanish insurgents. In the upper photograph are boys, who should be learning their three R's, being pressed into the service as road-makers. Part of their job is to repair the ravages of high explosive shells on the highways. Below the adult males, some of them fathers, are shown on their way to the front. Reports from Madrid front indicate neither the boys nor the rebels have gained serious advantages during the past week, though reports from northern Spain reveal loyalist forces have defeated insurgent Moors in the Albarracin sector.

Lincoln Words Will Endure; Trafalgar Phrase Put Second

Poll of Famous Sayings Gives 'Government of People' First Place

RHODES' PHRASE

London, Aug. 7 (CP)—The historic phrase "government of the people, by the people, for the people", written by Abraham Lincoln on a scrap of paper as the basis for his now celebrated Gettysburg speech, will endure forever, on the basis of a poll of famous sayings conducted by a London newspaper.

"Government" is the most significant, according to the consensus, but the honor of second place was keenly contested.

Nelson's inspiring signal at Trafalgar: "England expects that every man this day will do his duty," was given a slight lead for the runner-up award, over the last words attributed to Cecil Rhodes: "So much to do, so little done."

Here are some of the other favorites quoted:

"Call no man happy until he is dead."—Solon.

"Veni, Vidi, Vici."—Caesar.

"Take away this bauble."—Cromwell.

"How God be praised. I will die in peace."—Wolfe at Quebec.

"Roll up the map of Europe."—Pitt.

"A scrap of paper."—Von Bethmann Hollweg.

"Wait and see."—Asquith.

"Oh, yeah!"—The modern peroration.

Make Highways Safe Premier Hepburn Pleads

Co-operation with the Department of Highways and with the Ontario Government in their efforts to reduce the appalling number of highway accidents and fatalities must be lent by every agency and every individual. The highways are necessary and motor traffic has come to stay but accidents must be reduced and if possible eliminated.

Prime Minister Mitchell F. Hepburn has taken up this matter in a personal appeal which he has made through the newspapers of the Province. He tells that he is "personally appalled by the mounting accident toll of this season, by the stark horror of the growing total of cruel injuries and wasted lives."

The Premier's appeal through this newspaper is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

"Dear Sir:

"Last year 566 lives were lost in motor vehicle accidents in Ontario. This year, if the remaining five months show the same rate of increase as the first seven, over 800 persons will have died and 14,000 will have been injured. None of us has any guarantee that members of your family or mine will not be among this number. That makes it a rather personal matter for all of us to consider.

"For years the Department of Highways has conducted educational campaigns encouraging safer driving. These campaigns have made Ontario among the safest areas of the world, although the fact remains that this year we need something more. We cannot face the possible loss of 800 lives with equanimity. For our enviable record in past our taxpayers deserve a large share of credit; they have been remarkably generous and helpful in supporting our efforts, and I am sure will not fail us now.

"To meet the present situation the Minister of Highways has sponsored an advertising campaign designed to shock the people into a realization of the need for more driving and greater care. This newspaper is to carry the advertisements of this series. But advertising is not going to be enough. We know the power of the press and we know that we must have your wholehearted and active support, expressed in editorial and news column publicity.

"I am personally appalled by the mounting accident toll of this season, by the stark horror of the growing total of cruel injuries and wasted lives. I am sure that you too must realize the danger that stalks our families and I earnestly seek your help in our effort to make our roads and streets safer, happier places for recreation and travel. Your aid can make our campaign successful and I assure you your assistance will be appreciated by the Honourable Mr. McQuesten and myself.

Yours faithfully,

M. F. HEPBURN.

Army Concentration Causes No Shortage

Tokyo, Aug. 7.—(AP)—An acute shortage of coast-wise vessels supplying Japanese cities with basic foodstuffs has resulted from the concentration of all available shipping to back the Japanese Army's North China campaign.

Although the Government lifted restrictions on foreign ships engaging in coastal trade, no Canadian, United States or British vessels thus far have availed themselves of the opportunity to ply between Japanese ports.

The protest followed a report from the British Consul General at Algiers the machine gun and bomb attack "probably" was executed by "anti-government" aircraft.

Three monoplanes of unidentified nationality swept low over the Corporal in the Mediterranean, thirty miles northeast of Algiers, spraying the decks with machine-gun fire and dropped bombs close to the vessel.

Town Council is Called In Emergency Meeting To Consider Situation

Company Makes Statement Referring to Strike Organization

OTHER MANUFACTURING

Foremen Supervise Work in Factories Elsewhere, Says Statement

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 7 (CP) — Manufacturing operations of John B. Stetson Company (Canada), Limited, have been removed from here because of failure to settle the strike which held up production for six weeks, the management said today in a formal statement. An emergency meeting of town council was called for noon today to consider the latest development.

Claim Measures Free Action.

"We are sorry the unreasonable attitude of our former employees, badly advised by outside organizers and certain citizens of this municipality, has forced us to take these measures," the company statement said, adding it was not "going to be forced to deal with an organization in which it has no confidence and for the methods of which it has a stronger repugnance."

Future Location.

The company said "in view of the necessity of its fall orders being filled" it had obtained facilities outside Brockville to perform the work with its materials, much of its equipment, and under the supervision of its foremen. It announced further its ladies' hat division had been definitely moved to another town where satisfactory accommodation had been obtained.

While no announcement was made as to the future handling of the ladies' hat division, it was understood to have been transferred to vacant factory premises in Prescott, twelve miles away.

The decision last week turned down an offer submitted by the company.

Automat Employees In New York Strike

New York, Aug. 7 (AP)—Part of the employees of the Horn and Hardart Company which operates a string of 44 "automats" in New York, were on strike today with the claim that the company had violated an agreement with the New York State Labor Relations Board.

Officials of the company and of the Cafeteria Employees Union, an A. F. of L. affiliate, issued widely differing claims as to the effectiveness of the strike.

At the Horn and Hardart offices it was asserted: "The strike is ridiculous, only 150 of our 5,500 employees went out." At strike headquarters, a union official said: "The strike is effective; 2,000 of the 3,700 employees eligible for union membership have walked out."

Heat Main Topic in England After 14 Days of Drought

"Silly Season" Stories in Place of Real News Published

BRITISH NEWS SLACK

By I. NORMAN SMITH
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 7 (CP. Cable)

Like mariners running up a storm jack, an official of the British Department of Agriculture today ran up an "official drought" signal in many parts of England, provoked by 14 days of no rain.

Actually the drought still was harmless but crop reports recognize that if August 15 is the date rain has been free of rain for the fortnight but the greater part has had no showers.

Heat Single Out.

It is the heat, not the lack of rain, that is monopolizing conversation in English centres.

The last five days produced the hottest weather of the summer with the thermometer going steadily higher until yesterday it reached 97 degrees in the shade and today broke down the determined efforts of diehard feminist upon society in the same clothes they wear in winter.

CLIPPER ON WAY TO HOME PORT

First Daylight Flight in The Series of Tests

Botwood, Nfld., Aug. 7 (C.P. Cable) —Pan-American Clipper 42 rose from the placid waters of Botwood Harbor at 5:30 a.m. (E.S.T.) en route to Port Washington via Shediac, to complete her fourth transatlantic crossing in connection with the proposed commercial service across the Atlantic.

The giant flying boat arrived here last night to complete a 16 hours, 37 minute flight from Foynes, Ireland. The flight, Clipper 42's fourth crossing was the first all-daylight trip of the Atlantic series of tests in the fleet of Pan-American and Imperial Airways.

Heavy showers and clouds alternating with patches of brilliant sunshine greeted the Clipper as she made her fourth trans-ocean flight. Captain Harold Gray and his crew of seven, however, said the flight was "more routine."

Mounties Fight Way Thru Bitter Winds to Save 6 Men

GIVE UP BUNKS

Bernard Harbor, N.W.T., Aug. 7 (CP-By Wireless)—Locked in the clutching fingers of Arctic ice floes, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Roch has been abandoned by her crew of the foundered Hudson's Bay schooner Fort James.

Crushed in the grinding masses of ice, the Fort James sank Thursday night in the Gulf of Boothia and left on the northern border of Canada's mainland to fight her way between floating bergs.

Fighting their way through a bitter wind in driving snowstorms, the Mounties of the St. Roch pulled the Fort James freighter's complement from the peril of tumbling ice and frigid seas.

Ice Piles Wrench At Vessel.

They gave up their bunks to bring some comfort to the exhausted sailors who had lost their ship and their belongings.

Peril had not abated, however, either for the rescued or the rescuers. Ice conditions off this Arctic harbor are bad. Piled by a pursuing gale out of the far Arctic, great masses of ice were wrenching at the stout steel of the rescue vessel.

The station at Coppermine in Coronation Gulf, where historical geodetical headquarters at Ottawa to keep in constant communication with the St. Roch in case the situation becomes desperate.

Sergt. A. Larsen, sea-going Mountie, in charge of navigation, said he was confident his sturdy ship would withstand the pressure. Specially built to withstand the vicious ice, the St. Roch has been rammed and a round bottom like an ice-breaker.

Mounties' Seal Standing Sirash.

"Larsen and Sergt. J. U. Eddy, who is in charge of police duties aboard, led the eight other policemen of the ship's complement to the aid of Captain Summers (first name unavailable) and the crew of the Fort James after hundreds of tons of ice had piled up and bows like pincers.

First Mate W. Starkie, Engineer L. G. White and three Eskimo deckhands were the others saved. Captain Summers grieved over the loss of his 117-ton trading schooner which had successfully battled her way through eight years of Arctic

BUTTER IMPORTS 200 MILLIONS

United Kingdom Imported More Than 4-5 of Butter Entering Market

In a statement given today by Mr. S. L. Gass, secretary-manager of the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association of the local office, it was revealed that during 1936 the United Kingdom imports of butter reached the enormous figure of slightly over $200,000,000 which represented more than 4-5 of the butter entering world trade.

This great market absorbs more than 1-3 the cheese and eggs entering world trade, and practically all of the bacon.

In spite of increased prices for food products, consumption remained steady, the purchasing power of the people of Great Britain being increased through industrial activity and greater prosperity.

This information was received this week through special service from the London Times, London England by Mr. Gass.

The robbery was discovered shortly after eight o'clock this morning when Mr. Blake arrived from his home in Murray Township to open his place of business. This is the second time in the past six months that this particular store has been entered. The Provincial Police from Belleville were called and Constable W. H. McBrien was sent to the scene.

When Mr. Blake arrived from his country home, he found a ladder in the alleyway between his store and the Post Office, propped against his office window. The second storey a window was noticed to have been broken. Entering the store, he found the goods disarranged and after a check-up decided between $40 and $50 worth of goods had been taken. Apparently the robbers after completing their work left by the front door as it contains a yale lock and it could be secured, when they left.

Alleged Goods Found In Boy's Possession

"Quite elementary, my dear Watson," is a well known phrase connected with detective novels, but it had nothing to do with Robt. J. Graham, 10 Pulleron St., last evening, when he discovered some articles missing from his automobile and proceeded to investigate his own property, strikingly fine results for his sleuthing.

While attending the theatre last night Mr. Graham left his automobile parked at the upper end of the city. During his absence some person entered the vehicle and stole one pair of sun glasses and a steel tape measure. While proceeding to the police station to report the theft Mr. Graham observed a teen-aged boy on Front St. wearing a pair of sun glasses, that very much resembled his missing glasses. Stopping to question the lad Mr. Graham was agreeably surprised to find the glasses were his, while also found in the possession of the youth was the steel measuring tape.

The lad was taken to the police station and severely reprimanded by Sergeant Booth before being sent home.

Wilson, local Justice of the Peace, today and remanded in custody until Monday on a charge of intoxication. While on Front Street, yesterday, Pc. An old offender to the L.C.A. was arrested in Sonbery's second-hand store yesterday on a charge of intoxication. It is reported by police, that the man was creating a disturbance. He and two transients, along with Johnson, shared a cell block at the police station last night.

Dr. W. G. Turner of Montreal to Address Medical Association

A meeting of the Hastings and Prince Edward Medical Association of which Dr. J. J. Robertson, M.D., C.M., is president which will be instructive as well as interesting is slated to be held on Tuesday evening next at the Country Club, when Dr. W. G. Turner, B.A., M.D., C.M., M.C., F.A.C.S., M.R.C.S., Professor of Orthopoedic surgery at McGill University, Surgeon-in-Chief Shriner's Hospital, Montreal, and Orthopoedist of Children's Hospital at Montreal will be the speaker and guest. The dinner will be open to the ladies and will be served at 6.30 p.m. Standard Time and it is expected every member of the Association will be present as well as Physicians and Surgeons in Eastern Ontario who can be available from their practices and who have been invited by the President.

Dr. Turner will speak on the subject "Fracture Dislocations of the Cervical Vertebrae" which will be followed by a general discussion on Spinal and Pelvic Injuries. The address will be illustrated from actual slides of many cases treated. Dr. Turner and his associates have operated successfully on several cases of fracture dislocations of the vertebrae, this being one of the greatest advancement in medical surgery in the last number of years. Due to the number of automobile accidents in which occupants of cars have received spinal injuries, the subject has also a real significance and no doubt many will take the advantage of listening to a pioneer in this field of surgery. The local surgeon will arrive in the city early on Tuesday and while in the city will be a guest of Dr. J. J. Robertson.

Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Health, is due to be present at the Association in regards to the address slated to be given by one of the finest scientific meetings ever held in this part of the Province and every physician and surgeon should avail himself of the opportunity and be present.

ONE LOCUST TREE TO BE REMOVED

Public Sentiment Preserves Other Tree at Picton

One of the famous black locust trees reported to be over one hundred years of age which adorn the lawn in front of the Picton Post Office, has been ordered cut down by expert tree surgeons of Toronto brought to Picton for the purpose of examining and treating the trees for rot.

A. S. L. Barnes, tree surgeon, advocated that both trees be destroyed, but public sentiment was so strong against this measure that one of the trees will remain if strongly called and hence.

The seed of the tree was brought from Rhode Island over one hundred years ago and planted in their present location by members of the Barker family of Picton, the tree residence formerly occupied the present site of the Picton Post Office.

HEAVY PRODUCE ON CITY MARKET; PRICES ARE FIRM

Domestic Fruits and Vegetables Piled High on Vendors' Stands

EGGS HIGHER

Broilers And Fowl Popular With Buying Public

Despite the fact that lowering clouds threatened momentarily to send down a deluge of rain, one of the finest displays of fruit, vegetables and farm and dairy produce ever seen on the city market greeted a large and enthusiastic crowd of Saturday morning shoppers today. Irrefutable evidence of the bountiful crops of Belleville and district was seen in the huge piles of vegetables which filled nearly every available nook and cranny of the market. Potatoes, corn, tomatoes, and luscious, fine fruit from the fields of district, in fact practically every vegetable known to the gardener's art, brilliant and colorful display of domestic and imported fruits, the whole enhanced by the gay colors of cut flowers and plants gave the market an appearance of plenty that has rarely been seen.

No Decline in Prices

But in spite of the quantities present and in fact the huge majority of the domestic fruits and vegetables are in the peak of production there was no noticeable decline from the prices of a week ago.

Tomatoes rapidly approaching the fullness of crop did not deteriorate in price. Basket lots were quoted at from 80-to-,75 cents each. Boxes were offered to a fast buying public at 10 quart 15 cents. Sweet yellow corn, piled impressively around vendors' booths found popular favor with Saturday shoppers and was selling at 15 cents, although in some places vendors offered their stock at a dozen for 25c.* New potatoes were also plentiful and were selling at 75 cents.

Cabbage and cauliflower quoted at prices ranging from 5 cents up; cucumbers selling at 25c per 6-quart basket and the usual bunch lots of beets, carrots, onions and other staple vegetables rounded out a fine display.

Red raspberries showed a flucturation in prices today, while the majority of vendors sold their stock at two boxes for 25c some were offered at two for 35c, while others went as low as ten cents the box. Blueberries were in steady level, selling at 10c per box.

Cherries Plentiful

Montmorency cherries were plentiful and their popularity was one of the buying public with the Black Tartars. The former sold in 6-quart basket lots at 35 and 40 cents, with the Blacks going well at 75 cents per 6 quarts. Hundred-pound crates of a bountiful supply with 11-qt. baskets sold at $1.75.

New Fall Apples showed splendid quality, with no popular favorites. Transparents being quoted at $1.00 and $1.25 per hamper lot. Red Astrachans the one now being the largest ever offered on the city market, were selling at 10 cents per half peck. Duchess were offered at $1.00 per hamper. Fancy Pears and imported peaches were fairly plentiful and sold fairly well at 50 cents per basket.

The inside market was jammed with potential buyers within a half hour in spite of the fact that eggs had raised slightly in price and general prices being quoted at 26c and 28c for "A" selects. Some vendors demanded 30 cents, with others asking about 27c. Mediums were in a few cents less. Farmers' butter remained at 30c per pound for two-pound rolls, being offered in some cases at 50c. Broilers and fowl were plentiful and held to last week's close.

Fresh honey was quoted at 10c per pound in the varying qualities.

Whitefish and lake trout satisfied fish lovers selling at 22 and 20 cents per pound respectively.

TRANSIENT FALLS FROM TOP OF CAR

Paul Toranger Sustained Spinal Injuries But Not Serious

Falling from a moving freight train, a transient who said his name was Paul Toranger, sustained spinal injuries and was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital late this morning. Dr. H. E. Kennedy, C.N.R., physician, was in attendance and announced at noon the injuries received would not be fatal.

Railway officials stated Toranger was seen riding on a freight car on the freight train entered the eastern yard limits of the C.N.R. At the main street bridge, however, Toranger apparently lost his balance and fell off the top of the car striking his back with considerable force as he fell to the ground on the railway right-of-way.

Canadian National employees to witness the accident, rushed to his assistance, summoned an ambulance and hastened the injured man to the hospital, where Dr. Kennedy conducted his examination.

PRIZE OBJECTS LOST IN FIRE

Spacious Osborne Residence on Massassaga Road Destroyed

Originating from an undetermined source fire totally destroyed the fine residence of Mrs. Wilbert Osborne on the Massassaga Road, late yesterday afternoon.

The building which was a preten-tious brick structure contained many valuable articles among which was a highly valued collection of handpainted china, fancywork and other objects of interest and very dear to Mrs. Osborne and valued alone at $500.

The fire was discovered by Mrs. George Flowers, wife of George Flowers, whose family occupied the farm house on the Osborne family house. Dense clouds of smoke drifting past her kitchen window caused Mrs. Flowers who was alone in the house at the time to dash outside. There she saw a tongue of flame in the woodhouse attached to the rear of the building in question. Hurriedly sending in an alarm, Mrs. Flowers attempted to save some of the effects of the home. Neighbors rushed to the scene but so great was the heat of the blaze that the salvage of any of the household effects was impossible.

Mrs. Osborne was away from her home at the time of the fire and was unaware of the disaster until her return. The loss is covered by insurance, it was stated this morning.

Shirley Temple in Kipling's "Wee Willie Winkie" and Coronation Films in Technicolor

An untamed frontier athlete with crimson hair; fierce tribesmen striking in swift, deadly raid; the tartan plaid of Scotland fighting on India's saffron hills . . .will all that, and much going on in the little world that Shirley Temple, asked which picture she most enjoyed making, cast a fond and enthusiastic vote for "Wee Willie Winkie", the dramatization of Rudyard Kipling's famous story in which she is starred with Victor McLaglen, on the Belle screen, today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, matinee daily.

The reason? "Wee Willie Winkie" it seems, with all the reckless heroism of a Bengal Lancer has accompanied more thrilling action than Shirley has ever had in a film. Her eyes were bright with excitement, from the first day she went into the wardrobe department at Twentieth Century-Fox to be fitted for a real soldier's uniform, to the last day of the picture when she was permitted to wade ankle-deep in mud and finally take a hot, thoroughly satisfying fall in it.

The uniform was the kilted plaid of the famous Seventh Highlanders on duty at Khyber Pass in India, and it was brilliant with shiny buttons. With it was a cork helmet and also a be-ribboned Glengarry, Shirley was always eager to don the outfit and show it to her friends. She would plead with her mother to go to the studio cafe for lunch, just so she could be seen in her uniform, and at the end of the day she would be hard to be permitted to change it home.

With the uniform came a miniature rifle, carried almost like a gun, an accurate reproduction of the real thing. And Shirley had to learn the British manual of arms, just like a new recruit. Jack Pennick, one of the finest drill men screen armies, taught her the drills, and Shirley was as interested in the learn. coupled with her highly developed sense of rhythm, aided her in mastering the intricacies of the manual of arms in only six hours of instruction, whereas many adults require weeks of training.

When it came to marching with Victor McLaglen and the 1,000 extras who played the roles of soldiers in "Wee Willie Winkie", Shirley was at the height of her glory. An amusing sequence in the film is being filmed on the parade ground in military manoeuvres with McLaglen and a squad of eight men. Late one day Shirley's father, George Temple, arrived on the location set as Director John Ford ordered shooting on that sequence to cease. Shirley, eager to show her father how well she could march, had a whispered conference with McLaglen, then with the bugler, and then with the men of the squad. They had spent nearly five hours marching in the hot sun, . . . but they accorded to Shirley's request and put in another fifteen minutes on the march so that Shirley could show proudly for her father.

With Shirley and McLaglen in "Wee Willie Winkie" appear C. Aubrey Smith, June Lang, Michael Whalen, Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott.

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Farmer Takes a Wife" and "While Paris Sleeps"

Civilization marched westward over the turbulent Erie waterways in four-mile-an-hour boats and strong men hammered out an empire and held the love of beautiful women with their brawny fists.

That is the glamorous, action-filled picture of America in the roaring 1850's in "The Farmer Takes a Wife", brought back as grand revival hit fare at the Capitol commencing Sunday midnight at 12.05 and Monday and Tuesday.

About the tender love story of Janet Gaynor and Henry Fonda, the stars of the picture, all of the excitement, humor, romance and near-tragedy of this never-to-be-forgotten epoch, centres.

Miss Gaynor is a girl of the Erie waterways, fascinated by the nomadic, gypsy-like existence Fonda is a boy who works on the canals merely to earn enough money to buy the farm he has always wanted.

Although these two realize that there is this fundamental difference between them, they cannot help being drawn together by love. As the picture progresses, Fonda's fortunes prosper and he proceeds to withdraw from the canal. But Miss Gaynor believes that he is running from Charles Bickford, the canal's bully, and his rival for her affection.

In a pounding, action-filled climax, Fonda proves his courage and his right to Miss Gaynor's love.

Walter D. Edmund's widely-read novel, "Rome Haul," was the basis for the stage play and the picture of "The Farmer Takes a Wife." In the supporting cast of the picture, which includes more than fifty speaking parts, are Slim Summerville, Andy Devine, Roger Imhof, Jane Withers and Margaret Hamilton.

"While Paris Sleeps"

A man, half beast and half savage; a woman bent on vengeance; and a wolf-dog, monarch of the pack!

These are the thrilling ingredients that make "While Paris Sleeps" the Capitol on Sunday midnight as revival bill No. 2, one of the most entertaining and exciting outdoor dramas ever brought to the screen. Michael Whalen plays the dual role as head the cast of this Jack London story, and Gail Patrick, Lyle Talbot, Slim Summerville, Charles Winninger, John Carradine, Jane Darwell and Thomas Beck also featured.

DOCTORS DELIVER BABY AFTER WOMAN DIES

After a fight during which Philadelphia courts declared the life of an unborn baby should be saved if possible, surgeons performed a Caesarean operation on the dead body of Mrs. Mary Boccavini, left. Within a few moments of her death and delivered a baby girl whose weight is estimated at about three pounds. Mrs. Boccavini was expectant mother, was in the hospital suffering from tubercular meningitis and had been given only 15 minutes to thirty hours to live. Surgeons planned to operate following her death, but Mr. Boccavini (right) said if the mother died the baby would have to die with her. At was the will of God and there would be no operation, he claimed. Hospital authorities consulted a Philadelphia judge, who ruled the unborn child had certain legal rights. Following the death of Mrs. Boccavini and the saving of her baby, her husband claimed hospital authorities would have to take the child.

CHINA AND JAPAN

There is opinion that the western world and the semi-Oriental Russia will not interfere in the events opening up in North China. Some say that the western powers have too much to do and are too far away for the exercise of power so distant from their base.

It looks as if ancient China, which was civilized when most of the rest of the world ran around in animal skins or rags or dyed their bodies with the juice of berries, may battle alone.

China has a record of swallowing up her conquerers and if this adage proves true Japan had better watch out and not allow too much of herself to be established away from the Japanese islands.

Movements in China seem more like the patient movements of history, when powerful organizations develop in the course of time and exert their influence. In history all is not done in a day and even in this fast twentieth century and its fourth decade there is no sign that this law of history and civilization has changed. The British Empire was not born, it grew. So it was with the great empires of antiquity. Some sudden appearances passed as suddenly because they were not properly grounded, China however appears to be grounded in the soil and the mild-eyed Chinese seemingly can afford to wait, wait, with the patience of a sphinx and with something of the enigmatic smile of the sphinx, knowing that all will be well in the long run and that China is destined to play one of the mightiest roles in history.

Will she engulf in the final event Siberian Russia and the Japanese efforts at plantation on sacred soil of China? Some believe that this is exactly what she will do, not intentionally in the sense of deliberate action but through the natural course of events. Perhaps Japan may well ponder on the adage of the west, "He laughs best who laughs last." Yet even today China with her patience and her assurance can smile, as she sees her ancient neighbor whose main strength is her adoption of modern means of living and modern armaments striking at China with her largely ancient defensive arms. Yet with it all, the Chinese can smile. Her patience counts, even if she knows that there may be no help from outside against her ancient foe.

YOUNG PICKETS WIN

There was an example of picketing the other day which brought results. 200 boys and girls of the younger class paraded with mottos on cardboard nailed on sticks in protest against the action of the council of Orange, N.J. in halting an improvement of a vacant lot for use as a playground. The authorities reconsidered and went on with the work as originally planned.

It was in the morning at the breakfast tables that the neighborhood children learned of the halting of the work. Old cardboard boxes were used for emblems. By ten o'clock in the morning they were on their way, 200 strong, to the lot to do picket duty. Motorists, sympathetic to the playground; joined the picket line. By eleven o'clock the playground commissioner arrived and the chanting rose louder and louder and the young pickets showed not the slightest sign of fatigue. By this time the lot was swarming with children. The commissioner called them together and said the playground would be finished and suggested that they organize a hike to the county park reserve so that the workmen might be able to find space on the lot to complete their work. They went home, those who were old enough to make the hike, got picnic luncheons and went off on their outing.

In the afternoon the city workmen arrived to level the grounds and set up swings and slides, sand piles, and lay out a softball diamond.

Thus the young of the city decided the destiny of their playground.

All is created and goes according to order, yet for our lifetime rules an uncertain fate.—Goethe.

You will find it less easy to uproot faults than to choke them by gaining virtues.—John Ruskin.

We confess small faults, in order to insinuate that we have no great ones.—Rochefoucauld.

SILK TRAIN
By Victor G. Knelles
in Canadian National Railways Magazine

Highball! Highball! She is on her way,
Out of the yards in the twilight gray;
Gathering speed with each turn of the wheel
Pounding impatiently over the steel,
Her headlight dimming the light of the stars
That, wandering, gaze on the thund-ring cars.
Clear of traffic, the rails tonight
For nothing may hamper or halt the flight
Of a train of silk from 'Frisco.

Swift the inspection, careful and true,
Change the engines, and change the crew,
Highball! Highball! she's on her way,
Eastward bound at the break of day!
Sidetrack the Pullmans, express and mail,
Gilded aristocrats of the rail.
One with another they three may vie
But the must bow when the Queen rides by
A train of silk from 'Frisco.

Double-heading the mountain steep,
Drifting down through gorges deep;
Taking the walls of canyons ring,
As the shriek of her whistle goes echoing.
By dark and day she is hurring on,
Through gray of dusk and gray of dawn.
Whisp'ring zephyr and howling gale
Are one and the same to the Queen of the Rail.
The train of silk from 'Frisco.

O'er deserts gray and prairies green,
And all of the country that lies between;
With shriek of whistle and whirl of wheel
She follows that ribbon of shining steel.
Highball! Highball!—the tracks are clear,
The precious cargo at last is here.
A continent crossed, her work is done,
She throbs with pride at end of run—
The train of silk from 'Frisco.

ONE OF THE THINGS WHICH MADE JOE CLARK A HIGH CLASS EDITOR was the fact that he learned the newspaper business from the case up. He was one of those chaps who began the business setting type by hand in a country weekly printing office, and just naturally couldn't stop until he reached the highest rung in the ladder, as far as Canadian journalism could afford, chief editor of the Toronto Daily Star, a good newspaper and well edited. We can remember apprentice printers starting at $1.50 a week while two dollars was bing money for a printer's devil. However, while we might fill this column with reminiscences, an editorial chap in the Peterborough Examiner office has covered the ground so well, that seeing the weather is hot and the fish are biting, we reproduce his remarks in toto. Here they are:

"There was something printed in the papers about Harry J. Carmichael, general manager of General Motors of Canada, having been connected for 25 years with the motor industry in Oshawa. We read to that Mr. Carmichael once worked in a shop at New Haven where they paid him $3.50 a week. Of course he was just starting then and didn't know much about the business.

"But there have been times and places when $3.50 a week for a young fellow was considered pretty good pay. In the village printing office the pay for a starter used to be $1.50 a week, and the boss said a fellow had to be bright and ready to work or he wouldn't hire him at that. It's a fact too that a fellow had to have a general knowledge of a good many things. In the winter time the fire had to be lit in the box stove at 6.30 in the morning and the place had to be heated before the printers came to work at 7. It was necessary to know which of the stores in the block had been putting out some packing cases or which fence in the rear of the printing office would be least likely to make a board so kindling would could be provided. That required and it also developed a sense of observation. One had to know how to sweep the floor without raising a dust, and be able to pick type out of the cracks and put them back in their proper places.

"When the auctioneer got quarter-sheet bills printed for a farm sale (price $1.50 for 50) the apprentice had to know just where to go and hang them in the post office, the livery barns, the bar rooms of the four hotels and put them in window ad stores where the owner would not throw the bill peddler out; had to know too where to find the auctioneer and collect the $1.50 the day after the sale.

"It was also necessary to know how to clean lamp chimneys and fill the lamps with coal oil and trim the wicks so there would be no burns on them. One was expected also to keep an eye pealed up the street to see if the boss was coming down earlier than usual, and then hop out and warn the foreman to be there in a hurry. That developed an instinct which would have gone far in detective work. Necessary to show what the boss termed, an aptitude for setting type and running a press and folding papers and washing rollers and piling up the wood people used to deliver a payment for their paper. Learned to appreciate that the reason the wood was green was because the people who read the paper thought it that way too. Learned it was not considered right to finish the paper and get it mailed until 2 o'clock on Thursday morning and found out that the stage left at 5 the same morning and it was necessary to personally attend to the business of putting the papers on the stage. The boss always said a young fellow working in his office was getting a great training which would be valuable in years to come. And all at $1.50 per week while Mr. Carmichael had something to say about the time when he worked for $3.50 a week. He was an aristocrat from the start.

When Conservative leadership material is being discussed the name of Dention Massey is up. Not, perhaps, for the immediate future, but as a figure who is worth watching for the long pull.

Denton Massey is 37 and has only been in the House of Commons two years. He produces highly varied reactions on members in matter on what side of the House they sit. No one knows where he will land. He comes to Ottawa with certain valuable assets: presence, assurance in speaking confidence, ambition. He is an ardent admirer of R. B. Bennett as there is in Canadian public life.

He takes life seriously, and spent the summer with Mrs. Massey touring Denmark, Sweden and England, planning to study three important developments: the Danish co-operatives, Reforestation in Sweden, and the housing program of the United Kingdom.

xxx xxx

Denton Massey was good enough to tell a few things about himself, how he came to choose politics as a career, his hobbies and inclinations and so on.

"In my college and immediately post-college days," he explained, "I had no particular thought of entering political life. As a result of my activities in the York Bible class, and my love of opportunity to be of service, I gradually began to feel that the opportunity afforded by public life for service was extraordinarily attractive. Therefore I thought that perhaps when I had mastered a bit more, knew a bit more, and had reached the age of 30, that I might dedicate myself completely to the service of my fellow countrymen.

"In 1935 I listened to the radio addresses by the Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, and——for many years having been a tremendous admirer of him, and, further, after having for some years from almost every platform upon which I stood pronounced a similar point of view as that which he expressed over the radio——I at once offered my services for what they were worth for the forthcoming campaign.

"Almost before I knew it I was organizer for the Conservative party in Ontario and then, later, a candidate in Greenwood riding. Now I am inordinately proud to have the opportunities which are mine as a member of parliament, and am sincerely and earnestly endeavouring to equip myself to discharge those responsibilities to the best of any ability that I may have."

xxx xxx

In answer to a question about his ambitions, Denton said:

"There is a military streak in the Massey family, which has manifested itself so emphatically in Raymond, who has done such a magnificent job of work in that realm; in Vincent, who as an amateur actor is excellent and finished, and in my younger sister, Dorothy, who has marked ability as a producer, and whose play in the last Drama festival was extraordinarily well received.

"Thus, I had a smoulding desire in the earlier days to on the stage, and, strangely, in juxtaposition, there was also the desire to become a minister and to have a church, this as a result of my constant interest in the affairs of the church and the fact that I started teaching Sunday school at the age of 13 years.

"I followed neither and took a course in engineering, preparatory to entering Massey-Harris Company, which I did in 1924 as a machine operator in the belt shop. I spent 11 months in the factory, and finally landed a job in the factory office, and in 1929 became works manager.

"After resigning my position with Massey-Harris in 1931, I devoted my full-time to social service work arising through the York Bible class, and in the summer of 1932 returned to Massey-Harris for three months in the sales department.

"It's the fall of 1932 I entered the advertising business, and became a partner with another young man, in which business I remained until I resigned at the end of the second year in order to carry on in another field of endeavour which by January proved to be politics, and politics of such full-time demanding me beyond everything else.

Replying to a question about his hobbies and outside interests, the Denton Massey continued:

"My outside interests are concentrated in the York Bible class, which to use the words of John R. Mott in addressing us a short time ago, is a religious phenomenon in the religious world, for here are 2,000 young men who have met together for the past twelve and a half years, who have just completed the finest social fellowship season in our history, namely, though fishing has, in the older sense, claimed most of my time in recreation, I also have done a bit of mountain climbing, but had to give it up on account of a hockey knee that had the unpleasant habit of letting me down at the most unexpected and awkward places. I also indulge a bit in photography, and enjoy taking photographs rather than pictures."

xxx xxx

"My reading is almost entirely confined to fairly heavy literature, for, as I've already told you, I am endeavouring to learn something, and my Lady's apt to complain of the tomes which I read, as she calls them. I seldom if ever read a novel; my vice in reading is Conan Doyle, and I have read the Sherlock Holmes stories times without number. To me one of the greatest books ever written in my realm is "The Hound of the Baskerviles".

SALUTE TO Love

Jeff Howard uttered no exclamation and started to tread the flames nearest him. Then they both saw a startling thing. The curtains at one of the windows were burning.

The man rushed at them, jerked them from the pole and tossed them through the window.

"You've thrown them on the porch roof!" Katie said in a voice that she did not recognize as her own. She was not frightened, but she was outraged in war as not themselves. She, who thinking of them, had burn! I'd rather see it burn to the ground than to Howard's Pleasure!"

Jeff looked at her with wondering awe that what she said was true. The next of the girls must have caught the blazing curtains. They rested in the gutter, surrounded by leaves and twigs that were only a little dryer than the old shingles they covered.

"I'll have to go down!" he cried. He looked at her commandingly. "Do what you can till I get back!" he said.

He was gone, three steps of the stairs at a time. Katie moved out into the hall. She felt curiously detached and numbed. Yes, Maud Meadows was burning! She saw the next flames spring further. She believed that a breeze was fanning them — another curtain was going. . . .

She heard Jeff's voice below and looked into the room. She tore the flaming curtains from the sash and all through the window—threw them far and clear. Then she began to stamp the flaming paper in a sort of frenzied dance, and, when the last spark was beaten out, she beat her shoes with the only thing available, the heavy silken garment in her hands.

x x x

When Jeff Howard returned with rugs and a pail of water, the fire was all the fire extinguished. He went to the head of the steps and ordered her back a room was following him to give aid.

Returning to the smoke-filled room, he saw Kate Mead leaning against the window-frame. Her hair was disarranged, her face was smudged almost beyond recognition. She met somebody's eyes with a long time coming!" She was trembling. Then, because she was tired and shocking and burned about the hands but for power of the will that she had almost done, the creature she had aimed became:

"I got here as soon as I could," he replied shortly. "The cook's away. If he'd only left a man from one of the barn. And first we had to get a ladder against the roof."

He did not say to her, "Thank you for helping us save your home." He did not say to him, "I'm sorry I set your house afire." In the first flare-up of stubborn will with stubborn will, blocking the road to understanding. Then they were a man from the room and down the stairs, and no further word was spoken between them.

Katie reached her room at home she found Caroline there. She said to her automatically, "Did you me put on your best dress, Miss? My hands are burned. I went to Maud Meadows and I'm afraid I'm going to left in a trunk there. I had a candle and started smallest. Yes, Maud Meadows was burning! She saw the next flames spring further. Caroline cried out sympathetically. "Such awful things happen to you, Katie! You poor dear! What's that? she asked, noticing that the servant silken shreds that hung over Katie's arm.

"The dress," Katie answered grimly. "Your best dress, Miss Caroline! Isn't it?"

"Oh! Caroline said. "It's ruined, my lovely costume!"

"I had to use it as a flail," Katie explained. "I'm afraid nothing else to beat the fire with."

It was poor taste, carelessness, Caroline said, a sob in her voice. "Why did you do it, Katie? How could have the trunk carried down for you? He would have."

"I doubt it," for the whole question was secret. I went up to the attic without Howard."

"You didn't! Oh, Kate, how horrid of you!"

"Some of me, you mean. He always wins. I've been routed twice now without getting what I want. after. Will you help me get hauled—"

When her scorched cheeks and burnt hands had been cleaned and salved by Caroline, Katie sat dazedly. "I've almost ruined things for you, Caroline. You'll not want to sing without the dress, will you?"

"I don't know," Caroline answered uncertainly. "I was counting on it being a success. It was quite in the spirit of a thing." She examined the heap on the floor. "It's all ruined, Kate, all except the lace and the heavy bead lining."

Katie said quickly, "That's the foundation of a bonus, the lining! Caroline, will you? Buy some of the money from Brown Boy, so don't we can't afford it! I'll contribute the dress on the old thing. You can on the garlands that are left and—"

Caroline shook her head. "Mother Grandchest's not here to authorize all that what she said was true. The rest of the girls had brought only the blazing curtains. They rested in the gutter, surrounded by leaves and twigs that were only a little dryer than the old shingles they covered.

DESERONTO GIRL HURT AFTER DIVE

Suffering from severe leg lacerations received while diving in the water near Deseronto, yesterday afternoon, Jean McTaggart, ten-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Deseronto, was admitted to Belleville General Hospital last night.

Apparently not noticing jagged rocks lying on the bottom, the little girl plunged into the water. Her legs dragged along the bottom and over the stones, causing painful injuries. Dr. M. C. Morgan, Belleville, is the attending physician.

CORRECT COMFORT when travelling is important. That is why so many wise girls take with them printed satin pyjamas and matching robes. Such outfits are in week-end or wine with a white tie-print design. An ankle-length robe and slide fasteners are important features.

SMART YOUNG THINGS ask them about neat little linen frocks with bow trimming. A charming model is of white linen trimmed with all-around bands of narrow yellow linen that is dyed to match all the way from throat to hem.

A NICE WAR between house gowns and smart lounging pyjamas ends in a victory for an exquisite pyjama of black and gold lame with a small collar made entirely of flat gold kid flowers. It has also a wide crash belt of the gold kid-skin.

A SHARP EYE keeps tabs on the tailoring of some of the very smart charming suits seen 'round town lately. A beauty is in tobacco-brown silk shantung in a heavy weave, the jacket having a wide self belt. The suit is worn with a blouse of matching organdie with a neckline and front panel made of tiny massed blossoms of self material.

WARM EVENINGS bring out smart cotton frocks. A nice model is in a chevron-worked print of yellow and black flowers on a white ground. The dress is very molded at the bodice, and through the waist has shoestring shoulder straps. Very deep decolletage.

Get Dressed for a Party But Father Made Her Stay Home

Dear Miss Fairfax:

If I could have burst out crying, perhaps. I would have felt better than going to bed with so many black thoughts in my mind. I'm 15, and have just graduated from high school. Our class of girls and boys are still fond of each ther, and miss the good times we used to have at school.

One of the girls gave a party and invited our particular group. We were all going to wear our graduation dresses, and I looked forward to it with all my heart. My father is the grouchy kind. He always seems mad over something, and none of us can do anything to please him.

Mother said it would be all right for me to go to the party. I never thought of taking the tip with her, but when I came downstairs he asked me where I was going. When I told him, he said: "Take off that dress and stay home."

I don't intend to stay home a day longer than I can help. It's "no" to the first man who asks me to marry him, or else I intend to run away, or a sermon is said: "There's no place like home," and thank Heaven for that.

Rebellious.

So many letters like this girl's have come to me that I wonder why parents are so bereft of common sense in dealing with their children. Girls treated with so little understanding at home leave parental roofs, which seem just like jails, without realizing they will be jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

None of us, if not completely senile, has forgotten how we felt about such things as being made to stay away from the party in our early youth. All the enchantment of the world seems centered in the house where the party was to be given. And we recall how bitterly we resented having to stay home.

Perhaps if this girl puts her foolish threat into execution—marries the first man who asks her, or runs away from home — the grouchy father will have some painful thoughts for company.

Shall He Take Nagging Wife To Psycho-analyst?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My wife wakes me up in the middle of the night and tells me about something trivial. Did I remember to put a note in the milk bottle for the milkman? Why did I wear the striped tie to the office yesterday, instead of sending it to the tailor to be pressed? Why did I take the striped tie to the office yesterday, instead of sending it to the tailor to be pressed? Why did I take Junior to the movies, and deprive him of that extra half hour's sleep? etc. ad nauseam.

I'm a good provider. Is this nagging business I should go be taken to the doctor for treatment? Should I have her psycho-analyzed? Should she go on a vacation? I'm really fond of her, but conditions at home are driving me insane.

Haggard Husband.

Psycho-analysis might help immensely — also a vacation, if your wife is willing to take one. Personally, I think if your wife took herself in hand, she could effect a cure for her habit of nagging. It is rather a fashion among mental specialists to disparage will-power. Personally, I'm strong for it. But when a woman is so thrown off her balance as to wake up her husband in the middle of the night to nag him, she probably needs some help.

GOOD MANNERS

KNIFE AND FORK

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

After one has finished eating, how are the knife and fork placed on the dinner plate?

G.

Place the knife and fork together, parallel to each other, in the center of the plate, the handles turned slightly toward the right.

MASCULINE MANNERS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Should a gentleman go first when a lady escorts him to the door, or should she precede?

2. Should a gentleman take his hat off when the lady of the house comes to the door, whether he intends to go in or not, or is it sufficient to merely lift the hat?

3. Is a young man expected to escort a young lady home with his bed and also to make his bed in the morning, when visiting in the home where there was no arrangement?

4. When a gentleman telephones a lady, which is expected to conclude the conversation?

Miss Maude.

1. They would probably walk together to the door. If not, the gentleman should precede.

2. The man would stand with his hat in his hand, or he is talking with the woman-of-the-house at the door.

3. If the visitor's bed is not "turned down", he or she must of course do this. But a hostess would not expect a man to make his bed in the morning.

4. The man waits for the woman to conclude a telephone conversation.

CALLING CARDS

How to Keep Complexion Clear

SAD AND disturbed is the girl who finds that white, beadlike masses have appeared on her pretty face. Close to her eyes and near her temples. This skin blemish is milia, or whiteheads.

For some unknown reason, the openings of the pores close. The sebaceous glands send forth their oily exudations, and, as there is no outlet, they bank up until there is a raised point which may develop to the size of a pin head.

As the wax-like content of the pore is embedded deeply in the flesh, it cannot be pressed out. Treatment consists of slitting the little point with a sterilized needle, holding the wound open, between the fingers, plunking out the contents with the needle point. The wound must be touched with alcohol.

After the face is cleared of the blemishes, the afflicted lady should make it a practice of using cream freely, rubbing it in briskly, and using cold water at least once a day. Better circulation will make conditions normal.

When the veins of the hands are red and swollen, keep the little fingers out of hot and cold water. Rough work and too much moisture account for that beauty woe.

The coconut oil at night, rubbing it in with flattened fingers from finger tips to wrist, holding the hand up as you give the treatment.

The naive girl should use an old-fashioned perfume, like rose, which is popular once again. The glamorous lady can go in for exotic, mysterious blends. Dainty girls of small dimensions should use jonquil or lily of the valley.

One should choose scents according to type. Just as one selects frocks and hats that are suitable. The mannish, athletic girl needs lovely, woodsy odors, but the fluffy femme requires aromatic ones.

July Family Marks 100th Year In Dominion

On Aug. 1st., a reunion of the July family, descendants of the late Henry July and Mary Clarke, took place on the old homestead, 9th. Con. Sidney in honor of the hundredth anniversary of their coming to Canada. In 1837 they with one son (James) arrived in Canada from Norfolk, England. After years of labour and hardships they made a home for themselves where only forest had been. Later were born to them 4 sons, John, Robert, Frances and Henry, also one daughter, Marguerite Sophia, the only surviving member of the family who still resides on the old homestead and who attended the reunion. During the day she was presented with a bouquet of flowers.

The morning was spent in meeting old friends from different localities. Among those who came from a distance were Mrs. Rose, R. Juby and son Garnet of Hume, Sask., Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Rose of Milton, Ont., Miss Ann Lou Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Juby and Mr. and Mrs. James Juby and family all of Peterboro, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Patterson and family of Clayton, N. Y. Others from Demorestville, Shannonville, Belleville, and Stirling attended.

At one o'clock dinner was announced and the assembled party of guests sat down to a sumptuous repast. The tables were arranged over overhanging branches of sweet smelling cedars while a creek of sparkling water ran through and close by made an ideal setting for the occasion.

The afternoon was spent recalling many happy incidents of the past and a very pleasant time was brought to a close. After supper was served good-byes were said and all wended their way to their respective homes feeling it was a day well spent. Much credit was due to Arthur July, Pres. and Harry July Sec., and other for their labour of making the ground a beauty spot. Both were re-elected for the coming year. Reunion to be held the same date at Fred July's cottage, Lake Shore, Rossmore.

The following letter was received from R. R. July and read by his son Garnet:

Hume, Sask.,
July 18, 1937.

Dear old relatives and friends:—It is a matter of deep regret on my part that I am unable to be present with you on this, the 100th anniversary of the landing in Canada of our grandfather and grandmother. Our grandfather was born on Sept. 9, 1810, in Norfolk, England and came to Canada in 1837 as you all know, and I feel I owe more than a re-union, it is a Memorial day. We respect and honor the memory, not only of our grandparents but at this time we also pay our tribute to all those of our family who have completed their earthly labors and gone to their eternal reward. Not far from where we now stand their bodies sleep but their names are still fresh in our memories.

It is a source of satisfaction to know that the original homestead is still in the family and it is hoped that it will always remain so.

I believe that the record of the family for the past 100 years should be a matter of pride to everyone bearing the name. All have been thoroughly imbued with the spirit of honesty, loyalty and loyalty, those qualities of character that mastered our grandparents and have so thoroughly instilled into their children that wherever the July name has gone it is respected and stands for justice, honesty and integrity and we are proud to claim Eastern Canada or Western Canada as the birthplace of all who come to know it.

On this Memorial Day when they come together at the old homestead from all parts of Canada I am glad that my one aspect will be able to be with you to represent Saskatchewan, and to bring you a message from myself. My thoughts will be with you at this time and I take this opportunity of extending to you all my sincerest greetings and trust that when next year rolls around I may be able to be with you. That you may all have a very prosperous year and all your troubles be "little ones" is the wish of,

Yours very sincerely,
R. E. July,
Hume, Saskatchewan.

Your Land . . . and Mine

Yesterday, I read an article in a Canadian magazine with this caption "England Doesn't Like Us" and after recovering from the first shock of the news, I read on to the end. I do not agree with the writer! Polite, let me, a visitor from the Motherland, state the true position in an honest and un-biased manner.

Most of my life has been spent in England. Canadians say when visiting England, that there is a lack of friendship for the English are kept conservative. They criticise our business houses for the lack of camaraderie between employer and employee. These are but two of the complaints I have heard.

Now, you dear Canadians, let me state that the greatest loyalty to my fellow countrymen in England, that you must not lay the blame on their shoulders. The cons rests with the vast difference of customs prevailing in the two countries.

England is a tiny island, extremely old in history. For centuries, the old customs of this people are handed down to each succeeding generation. These, are most loyally adhered to, and, as a result, life in England seems greatly different from the average Canadian existence.

The English nation admire you all for your friendliness. They know of your fine qualities, and love you for them! So rid yourselves of this "hunch" about England.

Remember, we are all brothers all over the Empire. Life is too fleeting to worry over the differences in customs. Tomorrow may mean Eternity. So shake, brother, and let the Maple Leaf form a beautiful setting for the Rose of England.

VANCOUVER NATIONALS CAPTURE DOMINION SOCCER TITLE

Fighting a great uphill fight, the Vancouver Nationals, showed their championship calibre when they defeated Toronto Ulster United in a three-game series in Winnipeg to capture the Dominion soccer title. The Nationals had to be uphill fighters, for they were on the verge of elimination twice in the interprovincial playdowns. Toronto opened the final series by handing the Nationals a defeat but the Vancouver team came right back to take the following two games. The hero of the series proved to be Swede Larson, centre forward of the Nationals. He was the high scorer in the semi-finals and also the dangerous threat in the finals. He incidentally scored the winning goal in the final game which ended 3-2. The action photo at (top) shows some of the action around the Toronto goal seconds before the winning counter was headed into the twins by Swede Larson who can be seen over the goal tender's shoulder. John Easton, former president of the Dominion Football Association, can be seen (lower left) presenting the trophy to Trevor Harvey captain of the winners; Swede Larson, star of the series, is seen in (circle).

Farr Not Worrying Because Experts Do Not Rate Him High

By WILLIAM H. DUMSDAY

Long Branch, N.J., Aug. 7 (CP)—The Red Dragon of Wales fluttering over New York's Yankee Stadium, thousands of Welsh throats will solemnly chant "Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau" when Tommy Farr seeks to dethrone Joe Louis as world heavyweight boxing champion August 26.

"And I won't let them down," said Twmpathy Tommy, after his trainer Tom Evans today told him the gesture originated and was subscribed for in his native Wales.

"Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau" (pronounced "Hen Lad Vy Nadi" and translated "Land of Our Fathers,") was sung before the British Empire champion's last two victorious bouts against Max Baer and Walter Neusel, and Evans says he has been with Farr since the fighter was eleven years old.

"It does something to you," said Tommy as he came out among the Atlantic Ocean from his training camp home here. "I'll know all those good-byers back home are behind me when I hear that song."

To Be Given Emblem.

But Tommy won't have to wait until fight time to hear the strains of his National Anthem. On Aug. 15 at the speedway where he trains here, Mayor Alton Evans of Long Branch, a Welshman, will present the huge red dragon emblem to Farr while miners expected to come from Canada and United States will sing "Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau".

And the same Farr who started his career as a bare-knuckle banger and later fought eighteen times a week in a sideshow for $1.36 weekly over a two-year period, isn't worrying because the experts don't rate him much of a chance against Louis.

"Fighting is my game and if I was afraid of any man, I wouldn't be in it," said the 23-year-old challenger. "If I was afraid I'd be raising rabbits."

Demonstrating Guard.

Farr demonstrated his guard which has caused so much adverse comment. He claimed his style was high enough to block Louis' left hooks but the stance still looked as though he was about to settle into a dance.

"I was always a second favorite in a fight and if I was to step in against Joe as favorite I wouldn't know what to do," said Tommy.

"I would like to think Canadians were pulling for me in this fight," he said. "We are going to visit Canada after the fight and maybe see your quintuplets (the Dionne quints at Callander, Ont.)"

STAN AMO'S HIT HELPS AAJMAAS DEFEAT CORBINS

Winning Run Scored in Ninth After Two Were Down

SPLENDID GAME

Defensive Plays Best Seen in Loop This Season

Stan Amo's stinging single, that drove Nowbotham in from 3rd with the winning run, broke up a tidy pitching battle in the second game of game of the local Senior Softball League, when the Aajmaas Juniors up-set the old dope bucket and defeated the Corbic Locks by the score of 2 to 1 at Collegiate Vista last evening. In the first meeting in the league play-offs these two teams battled to a seven all draw. They did even in the replay of the tie game on Monday night.

"Lum" Carson was coach Red Townsend's choice as the Aajmaas hurler to be seen derricked in the first tussle, but last night he scattered seven hits well to hurt the Aajmaas side to a setback. Johnny Harris was assigned the mound duties for the Corbins and pitched good enough ball to win the average game, limiting the Aajmaas to five hits, but two of them came in the ninth and spelled defeat for the "lockmen."

Fine Defensive Play

The game was marked by the sensational defensive playing of both teams, many sparkling catches being made in the infield and outer garden. "Stud" Zither led all players defensively as he had 13 assists as well as three put outs to his credit. Next also played great ball for the Corbins' inner works, Johnny Ronsky, at short for the Aajmaas, stood out, while O'Hara made two fine running catches as Adams snagged a hard foul fly.

Harris struck out six and walked one, while Carson only whiffed two and also passed one. Harris had a home run in the third to deep left to count the Corbins' lone tally and until his own cause, his only safe mates rallied to click as the Aajmaas played head-up ball defensively and were backed down in the pitcher. Each team completed a fast double, the Corbins' when Zither made a sliding catch of Ronsky's pop fly and doubled Adams off first. For the Aajmaas Ronsky was safe on first at first and threw to Ronsky to get Zither at second in the initial frame.

Harler Hits Homer

Harris scored the Corbins' lone tally with a circuit blow in the third. In the fourth the Aajmaas knotted the count. Adams drove one that bounced off Harris' shins to Ronsky sacrificed , Amo strolled and Nowbotham banged out a hard drive. The teams settled away to give the fans repeated thrills with their sparkling work afield and their defensive ball from that point until the ninth when Nowbotham opened the final stanza with an attempted bunt, that developed into a single over third. Adams and Ronsky sacrificed in succession bringing Nowbotham around to third when Amo stepped to the plate and drove a hard stinging the drive at Zither, who made a fine stab and drove a hard stinging the drive at Zither, who made a fine stab and threw to second as a hit, driving Amo home with the winning run amid the loud vocal approval of the fans, who were apparently with the younger club.

The Corbins got off to a good start, seven to five Harris had a homer, Henn two singles, Zither a single, Cook a home run hike including a double in the sixth and Tuttle's single in the fifth. The Corbins had seven men stranded on the runways, Adams with a brace of singles, Nowbotham, second on error, while O'Hara hit were all three to connect safely for the victors. The Aajmaas only left two men stranded on the run-north, when they scored, and one in the ninth, three in all. The Corbins were trying the side in order every other inning.

The line-ups—Aajmaas Juniors—Robotham, c; Adams, 3b; Ronsky, ss; Amo, lf; Nowbotham, 1b; Reynolds, rf Tapp, 2b and Carson, p; Corbin Locks—Henn, 2b; Zither, ss; Reid, lf; Cook, c; Harris, p; Hamm, rf; Tuttle, c; Harris, p. and Whalen and Rigby, rf.

THROAT AILMENT ENDS CAREER OF 'EDDIE' GERARD

Ottawa Born And One of The Great Defencemen in Pro Hockey

A SMART COACH

Played With Four Consecutive Stanley Cup Winners

Ottawa, Aug. 7 (CP)—Eddie Gerard, who skated to fame with four Stanley Cup teams in the National Hockey League, died early today.

Mr. Gerard was a well known member of a championship team when his own home town was represented in the first of three successive Stanley Cup finals, but ill health forced the great defenceman to quit hockey at the height of his career.

Ottawa born and one of the great defencemen in professional hockey, Gerard played with four consecutive Stanley Cup teams in the National Hockey League, cleaning up three times in succession. He was a member of a championship team when his own home town was represented in the first of three successive Stanley Cup finals, but ill health forced the great defenceman to quit hockey at the height of his career.

Gerard was born in Ottawa 42 years ago. He was a smart coach of hockey's rough and rugged days that made Montreal Maroons' most renown. A power on the rear-guard, he was a scintillating figure in the days of the Ottawa Senators and the Bouchers.

Architect of the public school rinks in Ottawa's New Edinburgh district, Gerard first rose to public fame as coach of the Ottawa city club of 1920 and 1921. His battling spirit and brilliant mind and his ability as a forward played a big role in carrying the Ottawans to the title.

Helped Toronto Win.

Next year, Toronto's Scottish team ran up against trouble in the playoffs. Hobbled by a number of key injuries, the eastern representatives needed someone to fill the gap. They found it in Gerard, who left the bench and shoved the westerners out of the running.

Back with Ottawa the next year, Gerard again was in the thick of the N.H.L. championship. Thus, he became the only player before or since to play on three consecutive Stanley Cup winners.

Before his final title, the doctors told Gerard his throat condition had washed him up as a player. He took the coaching reins and Dunc Taylor promptly made him coach of the Montreal Maroons.

When Hart left to manage Montreal Canadiens, he went to the New York Americans for two years. Then he went back to the Ottawa Senators.

Under him there developed the powerhouse line of Babe Siebert, Nels Stewart and Hooley Smith. The methodical coach welded them into the hard-hitting tradition of his own Ottawa days.

Gerard was something more than a hockey player in his long career of sport. He was a noted footballer, an outstanding paddler, and he played basketball and cricket above the average.

Yanks Take Dramatic Way To Win Ball Games, Putting On Drives In Closing Frames

DiMaggio Hits Double in Tenth With Tribe Going Down

CUBS HOLD LEAD

Defeat Boston Bees in Twin Bill Securing 30 - Point Lead

By SID FEDER

It looks like a script for a two-reel thriller the Gehrigle way New York Yankees are winning ball games these days.

Coming after inning they play nice with the other fellow. Then just when it looks like those Yankee villains will wind up on the short end, they put a third-act finish to pull the decision out of the fire, usually to the accompaniment of a homer or two.

For eight innings yesterday young Bob Feller and the wizard squad in knots, allowing six hits and fanning an even dozen. With only three putouts to their credit, the Cleveland Indians' ace had his side, it looked like money in the bank.

Open Up in Ninth.

Then, in the ninth, Red Rolfe tripled to send one run across, and Lou Gehrig, victim of three successive strikeouts, socked a homer and the game was tied up.

Hal Trosky hit his second homer in the tenth to put the tribe out in front again. But with Johnny Hevingling replacing Feller and with two out and the count three and two on Joe DiMaggio, the Yankee dynamiter gave the "third act" its smash climax when he drove in the ball that broke up the ball game, for a 7-6 Yank victory.

That was yesterday. The day before, against the White Sox, Gehrig's boys featured a comeback in the eighth inning to pull a victory out of certain defeat. And the day before that, Bill Dickey hit a homer with the bases loaded to bring the Yanks from behind, and Gehrig blasted one to break a tie and break the game. And the day before that, behind 3-1 in the eighth, the Yanks turned the trick again when Dickey batted a homer with the bases loaded in the eighth.

Six Game Win Streak.

Thus the Yanks are sporting a six game winning streak and a mighty comfortable lead in the pennant race today.

The Cubs are applying different technique in the National League, but they're getting much the same results. Yesterday they belted over Boston Bees 12-6 and 6-3 with a double-header sweep at Braves Field.

This twin win gave them a 5½-game lead, although the second place Giants, who are slowly reviving, topped the Pirates 6-3 behind the pitching of his losing goldsmith.

Boston Bee Sox, hottest outfit in the big time, made it eleven games without a loss by taking the athletic and Browns were idle.

Chicago's Cubs moved away a seven-run lead and lost 7-10 to the Cardinals. Peaches Davis' four-hit pitching helped make a 5-1 win over the Dodgers in a night game.

GARAGEMEN IN FINALS OF LOOP

Defeat C. P. R. in Semi-Final Round in Last Game 13-8

Trenton, August 7 (Special)—After trailing for the first five innings Graham's Garage softball artists nipped what appeared to be an overwhelming C.P.R. victory in the bud by inflicting a stinging 13 to 8 reverse upon the railroad club in front of about five hundred wild fans at Bayshore diamond last night, and as a result of the win the Grahamites enter into the finals with the R.C.A.F. aggregation for the city title. The C.P.R. had the opening game to get under way Monday evening, and, after a fast mitting. Collecting seven runs off Gerald Gentry, delivery in the second frame the Trainmen led their rivals until the sixth inning when the latter combined to knock Sager's offerings and plastered them all around the lot for the eight tallies, that turned defeat into a decisive triumph.

Trainmen Favorites

Winding up the semi-final contest of the semi-final series without much trouble the Railroaders went into the eight inning game with the odds lite to take the laurels. But the murderous assault by the Graham batters in the last four sessions of the affair changed the story altogether and provided one of the biggest surprises registered in the Trenton baseball circuit this year. In a miserable error by the Railwaymen's second baseman, Al Kennedy, the Graham outfit chalked up the nine safeties and two strike during the fateful inning, that accounted for the eight run rally that gave the Garagemen victory for further fame. And a cluster of heat bunts by the garage crew in the last of the eighth that netted three runs left no doubt in the crowd's minds that the winning squad was the superior team.

Box Score and Game.

A lengthy circuit clout was polled by Waldron, the loser's left infielder, in the second inning and it was the only four base blast of the contest. Waldron, who relieved Gentry, who handled the Graham lineups from the second inning on, 17 hits 3 walks and struck out eight batters.

Darwin Sager started on the mound for the G.P.R. and after allowing 12 hits and seven runs to Ernie Bowler who gave up seven safeties. A pair of strolls and two strike-outs were the key issued to Sager's record. Teams: Grahams (Garagemen)—Bowler, p; Ferguson, 3b; V. Burrt, c; Waldron, lf; F. Kennedy, c; Lail, ss; M. Kennedy, c; Lail, ss; M. Kennedy, 2b; Gentry, rf; Lemaire, 1b; Sager, p. Bowler replaced Sager on the slab in the seventh and Lail went to second to fill Al Kennedy's vacancy in the same frame.

MONTREAL ROYALS IN TAIL SPIN

Babbit Maranville's Montreal Royals are picking the wrong time to go into a tailspin.

If the second place Montrealers only other team besides the league-leading Newark Bears to keep consistently above the .500 mark, keep on skidding, they're apt to find themselves in the midst of the battle royal now raging for International League playoff berths.

Royals have dropped their last four games, three of them to Baltimore Orioles, who knocked in each slightly punch-drunk with a 33-run barrage, and are now only seven games in front of the seventh place Birds.

Jersey City, only club just playing out its schedule, handed Royals their fourth straight loss yesterday, as the veteran Lee Mangum handcuffed them with three hits and gained a 6-1 decision.

Hy Vandenberg, suspended by the Baltimore management the past few days, came out of the "doghouse" to pitch the Orioles to their fifth consecutive victory with a five-hit effort against Toronto Leafs. Orioles won 6-1, belting Johnny Wilson for the hills.

Rochester Red Wings stopped the Buffalo Bisons' winning streak at nine, game of a night doubleheader after Syracuse and won the first game 8-2 and ran their victory string to eight. The Buffalo-Syracuse doubleheader was rained out.

FOXBORO POUNDS OUT 12 TO 8 WIN OVER KIWANIANS

Series Now Even For Second Place in S. Hastings Loop

PLAY ON MONDAY

Kelleher Given Ragged Support by His Team Mates

Foxboro, Aug. 7 (Special)—Foxboro turned on the Kiwanis juniors here yesterday and avenged for their defeat at the hands of the Belleville lads on Wednesday last, when they left the offerings of Art Kelleher, Kiwanis hurler to all corners of the lot, ringing up a total of 12 safeties to score a slashing 12-8 victory, and now all is set for the first of the second place honors in the South Hastings League playdowns. The third and deciding game will be played on Monday afternoon and no doubt there will be plenty of "fans" in Foxboro when the rivals renew their battle of the week which will likely lost the decision to the lanky southpaw.

Wilkins Lost Control

With the exception of the second inning when Kelleher momentarily lost control to walk four batters in the inning, Wilkins had the Foxboro trouble in setting the juniors down, allowing only five scattered safeties in the eighth innings, he worked, two of them clustered in the second inning. Besides the walks netted the juniors their only tallies, while the ninth when with an overwhelming lead, Ashley went to the slab for the Foxboro boys and the Kiwanians promptly worked him for three walks and two singles, forcing in four runs before Plummer popped to C. Wilkins for the final putout.

Held Scoreless Till Third

Kelleher retired Foxboro in order until the third when the Kiwanis defensive play went sour. Two errors by Ross Milgar gave Foxboro runs were in and the ball game was over as far as the locals were concerned as Foxboro steadily increased their lead reaching a climax in the eighth when they scored five.

Errors figured in the scoring in every inning which Foxboro tallied, the ragged support the Kelleher ragged support in the pinches, Joe Milgar fine ball player, Foxboro had a double by Ashley, being the only extra base clout of the game and Kelleher struck out six batters while he struck out six.

Williams supplied the fielding feature for Foxboro when he raced back to the fences to take a fairly long drive. V. Guay and Collins also made smart catches of boosts fly balls during the ragged part of it position. Foxboro kicked in with the only double play of the game, soon with Seeley on the starting end and C. Wilkins in on the finish.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

With Ken J. Colling

Besides providing some mighty fine softball entertainment with the calibre of defensive softball and class of pitching in the local Softball League play-offs has been remarkable to date. Although Stan Amo's hard drive to score Nowbotham from third made him last night hero, when the Aajmaas Juniors up-set the old dope basket and defeated the Corbic Locks 2-1, there were many other elements to consider. Bob Carson, the winning moundsman, and Harris, his opponent, deserved to win, both pitched fine ball last evening, but the support the pitchers were given was more marked. For instance "Stud" Zither at third for the Corbins, had 13 assists and three put outs without a bobble, Ronsky at short for the Aajmaas repeatedly made sensational pick-ups and throws, while O'Neil's running catch of Reid's Texas Leaguer in the fourth was a credit to any player, all of which was due to the ladies' defensive struggle witnessed locally in years neither team cracked under the strain, the Aajmaas merely getting the millionaire hit, when it was needed most. That class of softball will sooner or later pack 'em in.

Ascending like the proverbial balloon, the Kiwanis juniors hit the skids and dropped the second game of the South Hastings League to Doc Blakely's Foxboro nine 1: this time at Foxboro yesterday, incidentally the Kiwanis kids are a fairly good defensive team and the fact they had an even dozen runs scored against them was surprising when one takes into the first five innings while Foxboro eyened maintaining their lead to the finish in a third and final game, that is to be played on Monday afternoon. The Kiwanis lads were leading 3-0 at the end of the fourth, when a sensational double play and a spell of bad errors sent them sky-high. Joe Kelleher hurled steady ball and deserved a better fate than to lose, but the Kiwanis failed to hit from whence they could not seemingly emerge. The Foxboro nine never let up and surely deserved credit for their continued offensive type of ball.

Regarding Wednesday night's lacrosse game at Cahawa the Motor City sports scribe had the following comments to make: In the first period the Cahawa team ran wild and had the lead by the end of the first quarter and eight Belleville players scored their first goals. That's the way the team played. It was unselfish passing all the way down the field and the ease with which they completely baffled the Belleville defence was marvellous.

We are leaving today for a holiday and during our absence the "collyer" will be conducted by Ken with such columnists promising to keep things interesting. Softball business is becoming so popular we foresee it advisable to get in the swim. At least our readers will have something different to which to chew something different to many. In the meantime we hope to lure a few of the boys down to the shores of the lake of North Hastings during the next few days or so. Cheerio.

If the Belleville and R.C.A.F. football interests would but get their heads together and announce an amalgamation plan, two units of rugby, thereby assuring the sport title of the Bay of Quinte area a squad worthy of their support, there is little doubt regarding the ultimate outcome of any proposed membership campaign. On paper it seems as though neither organization is adequately preparing to combat the splendid squads being gathered in through importations by Cobourg and midget tournaments combined, however, a Belleville-R.C.A.F. football squad could be banded together and under the proper coaching whipped into fine form with sufficient gruwing qualities to assure largely increased patronage.

A new system of intermediate O.R.F.U. playoffs has been arranged for this autumn. The team will be known as group goes into Ontario Intermediate "A" playdowns. In case of a tie at the end of the season, the squad having the best winning record for the season will get the nod. This system gives some incentive to a club to keep right on trying for first for a first-place spot then for the runner-up position. The O.R.F.U. wants all intermediate groups going by Sept. 15th, there is only about a month and a half out.

President William Todd today announced the Belleville Sargents and the. Point-Anne "Cementmen" would play the third and deciding game of the two game series at Coleman Flats tonight. Other arrangements for the play-off games are in the making.

It is a well known fact that Joe Daley does not like travelling around the C.O.B.L. any too much, especially around play-off time. Yesterday the Napanee Oldcharts won 8-1 over the Ponies right in their own park and the Napanee ace pitcher Pelaher hurled a steady ball for the Oldcharts. When the closing game comes it is right, he's tough to beat.

TWO FEATURE RACES ON CLOSING DAY

(By The Canadian Press)

Purses are stepped up for the final day of racing at Dufferin Park Jockey Club today. The first four races are for $700 instead of the usual $600 and there are two feature races, the Globe and Mail handicap for three year olds and up with $1,500 and the Maple Leaf handicap for $1,000.

Chuckler, the favorite, scored in yesterday's feature race after a slow race of a tie at the end of the season, the squad having the best winning record for the season will get the nod. In the fourth race—a mile and 70 yards on the turf—Sam Rosoff entered with a rush to win. Hidden City led most of the way but could not withstand the rush of the winner. Ad Astra was second and Hidden City third.

Strike Up the Match

Francesca Pradich and Hans van Snyter were far more than just two people; they were an institution. Like Charlie Chaplin's shoes and cane, or the roar of Leo the M-G-M production. Their partnership had come to be regarded in Hollywood as one of the immutable facts of life.

And then one day in late July, quite without warning, it ended. Francesca simply announced that she had rejected a new contract and would, in future, free lance. Van Snyter obeyed at Zenith bound by a two year agreement. Hollywood gasped creditably, but neither of them would speak.

One there was, but one, other than the pair themselves, who understood. On the day Francesca made her decision she told Lee Arden. He said, "Well, good luck," then went out and proceeded to get very drunk.

Next morning, however, he came to the studio sorry. A pallor of swift and resolute decision, he had fully determined on a course of action. For more than an hour he strode about the lot, with a purposeful look in his gray eyes, seeking Hans van Snyter. It was futile. The director's name was on everybody's tongue, but none had seen him.

He gave up at length, and started through the buildings toward the front gate. Suddenly he came upon a hallway of dressing rooms, he found. The door of one of them stood slightly ajar. On its mahogany panel were two silver initials whose a name plate had been removed.

Softly, Arden pushed the door open. There all the room's far end, was the tall sloop-shouldered figure of Hans van Snyter. Head bowed, he was gazing down at something on the table which his body blocked from Arden's view.

"Mr. van Snyter," said the latter, stepping inside. The director whirled to face him, beady red brows drawn together, mobile lips compressed, slide-blue eyes fiercely demanding.

"I want to talk to you," explained Lee Arden. Van Snyter's hands clenched at his sides.

"There is nothing I wish to hear from you. Get out!"

"Well, you may not know it," said Arden, "but you do want to listen to me. And what I've gotta to tell you is so important that if you won't stay of your own free will, I'll lock the door and sit down and sit on you while I talk. Is that clear?"

There was a moment of terrific silent tension. Then van Snyter shrugged disdainfully.

"All right—go ahead. I do not travel with such as you."

Lee Arden was wholly unruffled. He perches easily upon a corner of the table, and said: "You won't admit it even to yourself, but I know you're aching with love for Miss Francesca. No, no—don't interrupt me. I'm not a fool—I know what I'm talking about. Well, you're here, suffering and trying to hide it, and somewhere else in Hollywood she's doing the same thing.

"You've made yourself believe, all through these last four years, that there wasn't and never would be anything more than the professional relationship between you two. Oh, don't try to laugh it off. I've been her secretary and worked with both of you long enough to see it all—only there were some angles I didn't understand until just lately.

A thoughtful sadness had displaced the hard bitter look on van Snyter's face.

"You're a fool, Hans," resumed Lee Arden quietly. "Don't you see this she's done this simply because you didn't act like a human being? You showed her you were jealous, but you wouldn't let her know it. You didn't say that you loved her. A woman like Francesca can't escape the tyranny of a cold, possessive attitude that demands all and gives nothing."

Softly, almost with humility, van Snyter asked: "And if I should think you were right, what could I do?"

"Why, go to her, of course! She's waiting for you—giving you one last chance to show your manhood!"

The director began a reply that never was finished. A slight creak of hinges sounded and then the doorway framed a slender dark-haired woman.

Francesca Pradich cried both men at once.

She looked from one to the other in surprise. "I didn't know anyone would be here. I only came for some things I'd left behind."

Lee Arden said: "Well, I guess Hans can help you find them. I've got to be going."

The instant the door closed, van Snyter moved toward Francesca Pradich. His eyes glowed with a gentle warmth.

"I'm very happy you're come, Frankie," he said. "He had been talking to me and I understand now so much that I've been blind to. I—I feel ashamed."

"Oh, Hans, my dear! You mean—?"

"Yes. He's taught me something I needed more than anything else in the world to learn—about unselfishness and nobility. When you left me you loved Lee Arden and I wouldn't permit it. I was a brutal idiot. I've changed, Frankie."

The unshed tears gave her eyes a wondrous shine.

"I only I had time," she murmured, "to tell you how wonderful I think you are! But—you will forgive me? I must let him doubt me any longer."

As bail he could Tarzan hollowed out a shallow grave and buried the mortal remains of Lord Mountford, who had at last found relief from the tortures he had suffered in the land of Kali. Over the grave the ape-man heaped stones to protect it from the beasts.

And now, instead of heeding Lord Mountford's warning to go back, he turned his footsteps toward the forbidden land. He feared his friends were already in the hands of the mysterious Matta. He must try to reach them before some horrible fate overtook them.

Soon, as had Wood and van Eyk before him, he encountered the tribe of friendly blacks. "You saw white men go this way?" Tarzan asked. "White men go that way," the chief answered; "they not come back. They never come back. You go, you never come back!"

Twice Tarzan had been warned of the inscrutable mysteries of the Kaji. But no warning could deter the valiant ape-man. More than ever he was eager to pit his strength against the terrible Matta. There was a foe worthy of his mettle. The mighty Tarzan advanced!

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford by Private Wires.

Ventures Exercise Option on Canadian Malartic Mines.

Ventures Limited and associates have taken up 300,000 shares of Canadian Malartic at $1, under the original option arrangement covering 400,000 shares at that price. The option expired on August 1st.

Strength has been pronounced in Consolidated Smelters and has, to a smaller extent, in such issues as Noranda and Sherritt Gordon. Prices of copper, lead and zinc all advanced in London during the past week. Reports circulated on Saturday and it is likely that higher quotations will be seen. No rapid advances are anticipated however and well informed metal circles predict that any rapid rise will be checked by reactions. Lead and zinc are still much below the high quotations of a year ago, although the former metal had March but the then sharp rise was not justified since the price had immediately after the war-scare was over.

Shareholders of both the Mount Royal Hotel and Windsor Hotel will be interested to learn that, according to a survey of the tourist situation in Montreal, hotels are benefitting from an increase in the demand for hotel accommodation over last year. There is also a fair improvement in the class of business—tourists are the ones staying longer and demanding a better class of room. One hotel reported an improvement of 30 per cent in the volume of business since mid-June as compared with last year.

Latest Alberta Social Credit Legislation Looks Like Last Gasp of Aberhart.

The latest attempt of the Aberhart government in Alberta to save its fast-fading social credit idea from destruction by passing legislation designed to control the banks in the province by means of license appears to be a last gasp on the part of the premier in an effort to go the limit for social credit even though he must know that limit is quite definitely outside provincial jurisdiction.

The whole idea of social credit might work in a self-contained state with a minimum of outside connections but in a province that is economically only a small part of a much larger country which itself is intimately tied up with world connections, the scheme is doomed to failure. It seems to have been forgotten that when Major Douglas rendered his final report to the Alberta government on leaving that province a couple of years ago he pointed out that to properly introduce his scheme it would be necessary for the province to have far more control over banking and currency than it had under the present Confederation of Canada.

It was therefore obvious that this banking legislation would have to come sooner or later and Premier Aberhart, now knowing his case is hopeless, is simply passing the law with the full knowledge that it transgresses Dominion legislation and that the Dominion will have to disallow it. When it does so, the premier will then be able to tell his followers that if they haven't got social credit it's obviously not his fault which will be quite true in its way, but it would seem that a school boy could have figured that out two years ago.

Cattle are Included In New Ont. Gov't Act

Owners of Both Cattle and Sheep Entitled to Compensation When Animals Killed or Injured by Dogs

All owners of cattle or sheep killed or injured by dogs are entitled to compensation either by the dog owners or by the municipality, according to legislation sponsored and piloted through the Ontario Legislature at the last session by Hon. Duncan Marshall, Ontario Minister of Agriculture. "Injured" or "injuring" applies to injuries caused by wounding, worrying, terrifying or pursuing.

Up until the last session of the Legislature, the law was very much to sheep. So many reports of cattle being killed or maimed by savage dogs were received by Hon. Mr. Marshall, that he decided legislation should be introduced to provide compensation for these cattle owners, the new Dog and Live Stock Protection Act," which clearly defines the responsibilities of dog owners and municipalities in case where animals are killed or injured.

Whether or not the owner or any dog killing the stock is known, the municipality in which the live stock were killed or injured shall be liable for the live stock owner for the amount of damage as ascertained by fifteen valuers appointed by the municipality.

In order to be relieved, the owner must notify the municipality within 48 hours after he has discovered the killing or injuring, and the carcass must not be destroyed until it has been seen by the valuer for the municipality.

If the owner or the municipal council is dissatisfied with the report of the valuer, they may appeal to the Minister of Agriculture. —The Hon. Duncan Marshall— within thirty days of the award. This appeal must be made in writing, accompanied by a $25 deposit, and the Minister may name a valuer to make further investigation. The report of the valuer shall be final and conclusive as to the amount and extent of damage done. The money is returned if the appeal is successful, but forfeited if the appeal is lost.

If no live stock valuer has been appointed by the council or clerk of any municipality, the Minister of Agriculture, on application by the owner of live stock, may name a valuer whose report shall be final. Moneys payable by the council being liable for the cost of valuations as well as the cost of award. Reports of the award will be forwarded to the owner and the live stock owner.

Where live stock has been killed or injured in territory without municipal organization, the owner of the dog shall be liable for damage, and it will not be necessary to prove the dog was accustomed to worry live stock.

Copies of the Act are outlined above, can be obtained by writing to The Livestock Branch, Ont. Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ont.

TRAFFIC LINES TO BE REPAINTED

The traffic lines on the main streets of Belleville are to be repainted next week, City Engineer Mott announced today after consulting the Public Works Department of the city. The paint to be used by the department in the repainting of the traffic lines is a eastern eight hour paint, dries quickly. The co-operation of motorists and merchants is solicited as the painting is to be done during the daytime. City Engineer Mott announced that certain sections of the main streets will be barricaded at noon and will remain closed until reopened from noon until midnight and the barricades removed for the general use of the public early next morning. Only one section of one side of a street will be painted at one time, thus not seriously interfering with the general traffic and parking conditions. Citizens are requested to act accordingly and cooperate with the department in their efforts to make the city's parking lines more distinguishable.

"Snail Pacers" Should "Try Courtesy"

The unreasonably slow driver, particularly during the speed limit fashion, is not related to 50 miles per hour, is more than ever a potential cause of highway traffic accidents. Though he may not actually be involved in a collision, his lack of courtesy or consideration for drivers who are forced to parade behind him creates an "annoyance and aggravation" that often results in accidents and fatalities caused by cutting in and out of the line of traffic, and soon forms and one cannot pass in confidence. The old-fashioned "snail pace" driver on a hill or curve, according to Chief Inspector J. A. Grant, head of the motorcycle patrol branch of the Provincial Police.

JAPANESE EVACUATIONS SURPRISING TO CHINESE

50 Trainloads of Chinese Pass Through Shantung Japanese Reports State

Central Chinese Valley Wholly Evacuated by Japanese

SITUATION GRAVE

Desire Not to Aggravate Situation is Seen by Japanese

Tokyo, Aug. 9 (CP-Havas)—Fifty trainloads of Chinese troops have passed through Tsinan, capital of Shantung, bound northward toward Tientsin during the last few days, Japanese press dispatches reported here today.

Troops were also being moved northward via the Grand Canal, the report said.

It was officially reported that Japanese evacuation of the central China valley, unprecedented since evacuation of British Nationals and other foreigners in the spring of 1927 was now complete.

Japanese Regretted.

Shocked by Japanese gunboats, Japanese residents of Wuchang, Hankow, Changsha, Hsiangtang, Chinkiang and other Yangtze River towns have arrived at Shanghai and are there awaiting repatriation. It was announced.

A Nanking message said this step had apparently "shocked" the Chinese authorities who were impressed by the way in which Japan evidently regards the situation. It was pointed out that during the invasion of Manchuria six years ago Japanese residents were withdrawn from only a few places.

Some Say "Massacre" Feared

Evacuation, according to a foreign office spokesman, however, was prompted by the desire not to aggravate the situation since any untoward incident could occur so long as there is a large number of Chinese stranded in exposed positions. They also feared another "Tungchow massacre," the spokesman said.

(A large proportion of that atrocious community of Tungchow were slain two weeks ago.)

Japanese residents have likewise been withdrawn from Canton, Swatow and other towns of South China although the Japanese male population of Amoy is staying on.

SIXTEEN DEAD AND 50 INJURED IN WEEKEND TOLL

One of The Blackest Weekends For Traffic Accidents This Season

TWO DROWN

Tragic Feature of Weekend Toll Was the Death of 5 Children

(By The Canadian Press)

Fourteen persons were dead today and upwards of 50 injured after one of Ontario's blackest week-end for traffic accidents. Bringing the fatality list to sixteen were two drownings.

Jack MacDonald, Toronto Hydro lineman, was drowned in the Muskoka Lakes district near Bala, while the waters of Lake Timagami claimed Norman R. Thorpe, Hodgsons' Bay Company factor on Bear Island in Northern Ontario.

Tragic feature of the week-end toll was the death of five children two of Lake View. The automobile accidents ran the gamut from head-on collisions to crashes caused by fatigue, a stalled car with a radial car and the death of two women who fell to their deaths from boards of machines.

Mrs. E. Fenton of Guelph, asleep as a passing motorist in Hamilton to give her a lift to overtake a bus she just missed. She insisted, the driver told police, in standing on the running-board and then jumped to the street before the car stopped. She fractured her skull on a pile of rock on the road on the way to the hospital.

On a concession road north of Toronto, Gertrude Coverdiuck, 15, Richmond Hill, was riding on the

DIONNE QUINTS HAVE DEVELOPED VERY MILD COLD

Five With Not Be Visible to Public For Two or Three Days

NO ANXIETY

Illness Attributed to Outside Source Says Dr. Dafoe

Callander, Ont., Aug. 9 (CP) — The Dionne quintuplets have developed mild colds their physician, Dr. A. R. Dafoe said today. Dr. Dafoe said that Emilie, who had been under "observation" for a week with a sore throat, is now well, but her four sisters, Yvonne, Annette, Cecile and Marie have also colds and the five will not be visible to the tourist public for two or three days.

Dr. Dafoe emphasized that no anxiety is felt and said it is not believed by Alan Brown, Toronto child specialist, who arrived in for consultation as he was in Emilie's case. The quintuplets have been feeling the heat and are being "put up to the mark," so the daily inspection by doctors has been suspended for the time being.

Diet is Unchanged

No change has been made in their diet and they are allowed the run of the play pen, as usual but under discretion of the nurse in charge. The guards against their getting too tired.

Emilie is now quite well" the doctor said, "but there's no point in bringing one of them out alone to talk to the press." Besides, the others would be lonesome."

The quints are not confined to bed except for their normal sleeping hours.

Dr. Dafoe said that the statement issued last week in connection with Emilie's sore throat, her illness to an outside source—"holds for the others at this time."

No Anxiety Results

The doctor's formal statement today said:

"Three quintuplets have developed mild colds, and not being up to the mark, due to the colds and the intense heat of the past few days, the five little girls will not be visible to the public for two or three days as this is somewhat of a strain on them.

"No anxiety is felt for their condition, nor is it expected that Dr. Alan Brown will be called in consultation as was the case last week when Emilie had a sore throat and ear. The statement issued at that time regarding Emilie holds also for others at this time. Emilie is now well."

The statement issued Aug. 3 after Dr. Brown examined Emilie and found she had a slight throat infection.

"I have today examined Emilie's throat and she is continuing Dr. Dafoe's diagnosis of a mild pharyngitis pharyngeal infection from which she is rapidly recovered in a few days.

"The staff of the hospital was examined today and no clinical evidence of any of them harboring an infection. It is thus evident that the infection has been obtained from outside sources."

Four-Power Agreement To Replace Old Locarno Would Stir Up Republic

France Say Diplomats Stand to Gain by Anglo-Italian Pact

RUSSIA INVOLVED

Mediterranean Deadlock to Remain While Italy Holds Balearics

FOUR POWER .... pelwiz

London, Aug. 9 (AP) — Possible French objections to a practical working agreement between Great Britain and Italy arose today as diplomats began preparing Britain's case for the Rome friendship talks scheduled to start at the end of September.

Diplomats were compelled to keep in mind that a four power non-aggression pact to replace the abandoned Locarno—which they reported as a possible outcome of the present situation—would raise a storm of protest in the French popular front, which makes up the French government. France is bound by a pact with Russia.

French to Gain By Agreement.

Britain, however, is said to feel likely that, in the long run, she would stand to benefit as much as Great Britain by settling accounts with Italy.

Foreign Office experts, therefore, have set themselves with enthusiasm to the task of preparing the groundwork for the talks in which Foreign Secretary Rt. Hon. Anthony Eden, Colonel Ciano, Italian Foreign Minister, may participate.

Practical considerations for the safety of British communications through the Mediterranean are felt to be at the root of Prime Minister Chamberlain's move to end two years of embittered relations between Great Britain and Italy.

Mediterranean Deadlock.

The Mediterranean situation has been and will remain deadlocked, it was felt, as long as Italy remains entrenched in the Balearic Islands in the western Mediterranean.

Chamberlain, it is felt, is now prepared to renew the "gentlemen's agreement" by recognizing Italy's conquest. In addition to this, informed commentators said, Chamberlain eventually would be prepared to concede Italy a sort of influence in Spanish Morocco and recognize the insurgent Spanish regime as a belligerent.

In exchange, these commentators said, Great Britain would insist on Italy's abandoning the Spanish Balearic Islands, after the Spanish civil war is over and absolute cessation of anti-British propaganda in Arabian countries.

JAPAN COMPLETES HOPEH CONQUEST

3,000 Troops March Into Peiping And Establish Rule

(By C. Y. McDaniel)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Tientsin, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Japanese army completed its conquest of northeastern Hopeh province today when Japanese administrators moved slowly toward establishment of a permanent civil government in the rich Chinese region.

A Japanese brigade of 3,000 men marched into the city of Peiping yesterday with 50 trucks, 15 tanks and considerable cavalry, took the ancient capital of China's Manchu emperors under its protection and made it, for all practical purposes, a Japanese city.

The Japanese troops, commanded by Major General T. Kawabe, paraded along the boulevards and under a canopy of triumphal arches claimed Imperial China's glories. Then the various units deployed throughout the city, taking up their garrison duties.

In Tientsin, army reacquarters of the Japanese who have wrested northeastern Hopeh from Chinese troops in a month of undeclared war into judiciary, police and communications administrations were brought under complete Japanese control.

Trenton, August 9 (Special)—Up to date a number of remarkable catches have been taken from the western end of the Bay of Quinte, near Twelve O'Clock Point. Trolling close to an hour yesterday afternoon, "Bucky" Harris of Carrying Place hauled into his punt a lunge that measured 4 ft. 1 in. in length and weighed 31 lbs. neighborhood of 30 pounds. BENNETT REMAINS AS PARTY LEADER

Resolution Passed Records Pleasure at Improved Health

OTTAWA, Aug. 9.—(CP)—With Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett remaining at the helm, the Conservative Party prepared today to launch a nation-wide organization program in preparation for the next general election.

That Mr. Bennett, improved in health, was willing to continue to devote his efforts to public service and retain active leadership of the party for the time being was indicated following a meeting of Conservative members of the House of Commons.

The meeting was called Saturday to deal with the question of Mr. Bennett's leadership and other matters concerning the party. Ever since he suffered a serious illness in 1936 the possibility of his retirement has been more or less prominent in the minds of party members.

Resolution Passed

Text of a resolution adopted unanimously which made no direct mention of leadership or of party organization but which officials said statement given out after the meeting was attended by 97 of the 39 members of the House.

"The meeting," the resolution read, "of Conservative members of the House of Commons, assembled at the call of Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, on his return from Europe records its profound pleasure to learn of his improved state of health and of his willingness to devote his remarkable ability, great experience and unequalled knowledge of public problems to the service of the Canadian people."

R. B. White, veteran member for St. Lawrence-St. Lawrence, Montreal, who acted as spokesman, said organization matters were discussed at length. The meeting appointed committees to get the nation-wide organization under way. In every province committees will be formed and eventually the organization will be centralized under a national office at Ottawa.

Four Persons Including Crew Taken off Ship Crushed in Ice

ADRIFT TEN DAYS

By GUY E. RHOADES
Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Coppermine, N.W.T., Aug. 9 (CP) Twelve persons, including five children were brought ashore here Saturday from the wrecked Hudson's Bay Company auxiliary schooner Fort James which, crushed in ice, sank early Friday off Charity Island near Berthard Harbor, 100 miles northeast.

Captain R. J. Summers of Brighton, England, his crew of seven and the Bayonet family of seven were rescued from the sinking vessel by the crew of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Orch, which had left the bay two days before the imminent danger hereof.

The Fort James, bound for Fullerton station, 200 miles southside, became icebound July 27 in Dolphin Strait and drifted in the pack until Aug. 5 when terrific pressure lifted her, turning her on her side, shearing away the keel and splitting her rudder.

Fire Extinguished

As she heeled over a galley stove upset, setting fire to the wood work but the crew quickly extinguished the blaze. Thursday the ship filled rapidly but held atop the ice until early Friday when she sank in ten fathoms of water.

All hands worked frantically to get the Eskimo family out of the hold as water poured in and also from the St. Roch under command of Sergeants J. U. Eddy and Henry Larsen, rushed over to be help in the rescue. There was no cargo aboard except a few bales of fur skins which were submerged before they could be removed.

Captain Summers, veteran Arctic navigator, was second officer aboard the Baychimo, ghost ship of the Arctic which, lost in the ice in 1931 was found by Captain Harry Sparks, Alaska, showed up in the pack two years ago.

"The Fort James took terrible punishment before the end," Summers later said after being brought here. "A weaker vessel would have gone down long before. It was a miracle how we got safely off Point Barrow."

The captain's account of the wreck, told to Governor-General Tweedsmuir on his Excellency's visit to Coppermine, was related with difficulty. His speech was rendered hoarse by the bitter cold he got at the bottom of the Arctic Ocean with his ship.

"Beach Like Battlefield" Says Doctor Who is Called

BATHERS BOWLED OVER

New York, Aug. 9 (AP)—Fourteen persons were recovering today from the electrical shock of lightning bolt that took a toll of three lives at Long Island resort.

Jagged prongs of one great lightning fork struck apparently simultaneously yesterday afternoon among widely separated groups of bathers.

Robert Andrews, Jr., 5, was killed as he and his father huddled with a score of other persons in a wooden shack at Rockaway Beach. A mile away, Albert Fulverczyc, 23, and Stanley Maciejewiz, 17, both of Brooklyn, were killed instantly.

The bolts also bowled over men and women huddled beneath rain drenched umbrellas. Physicians, called for rushed to the scene said he found the beach "like a battlefield."

Four Persons Including Crew Taken off Ship Crushed in Ice

ADRIFT TEN DAYS

By GUY E. RHOADES
Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Coppermine, N.W.T., Aug. 9 (CP) Twelve persons, including five children were brought ashore here Saturday from the wrecked Hudson's Bay Company auxiliary schooner Fort James which, crushed in ice, sank early Friday off Charity Island near Berthard Harbor, 100 miles northeast.

Captain R. J. Summers of Brighton, England, his crew of seven and the Bayonet family of seven were rescued from the sinking vessel by the crew of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Orch, which had left the bay two days before the imminent danger hereof.

The Fort James, bound for Fullerton station, 200 miles southside, became icebound July 27 in Dolphin Strait and drifted in the pack until Aug. 5 when terrific pressure lifted her, turning her on her side, shearing away the keel and splitting her rudder.

Fire Extinguished

As she heeled over a galley stove upset, setting fire to the wood work but the crew quickly extinguished the blaze. Thursday the ship filled rapidly but held atop the ice until early Friday when she sank in ten fathoms of water.

All hands worked frantically to get the Eskimo family out of the hold as water poured in and also from the St. Roch under command of Sergeants J. U. Eddy and Henry Larsen, rushed over to be help in the rescue. There was no cargo aboard except a few bales of fur skins which were submerged before they could be removed.

ABERHART GIVES REASON FOR ACT

Demanded Resignation of Attorney-General of Province

Edmonton, Aug. 9 (CP)—Attorney-General Lucien Maguire's resignation from the Alberta Social Credit cabinet was requested because he had "felt himself out of harmony with the movement," Premier Aberhart stated last night.

The welfare of the people and the cause we represent demands the displacement of those in authority who find it impossible to give 100 per cent. service to the performance of their functions," he said Premier Aberhart.

In view of these fundamental principles I had no alternative but to act as I have done."

Dr. Hugh Allen, in his resignation before he left Saturday night to attend the Canadian Bar Association Convention in Toronto. He will represent Alberta at the convention.

It is not expected his resignation will be formally announced until his return.

In government circles it is thought Premier Aberhart will assume the acting head of the Attorney-General's department until a successor to Maguire has been appointed.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

What is a rainy region? A place having 80 inches of rain on an average a year is considered very wet. Some of the very large yearly averages are: 426 inches at Cherra Punji, Assam, India, and about 450 inches at Mt. Waialeale, Island of Kauai in the Hawaiian group. In this country the wettest locality is Glenora, Oregon, 131 inches. The districts in this country having large rainfalls are in western Washington and Oregon, where the average is 100 inches; southwestern North Carolina, 70 inches; and on the Gulf Coast extending around Mobile, Ala., 60 inches. Contrast these with the deserts of Nevada and California, where there is less than 5 inches, or the Atacama Desert in Chile, where it rains once in seven years.

Not only has the potentialities of the tomato crop caused canning factories some concern with regard to securing sufficient help, to handle the crop, but farmers of the district are casting speculative eyes at their fields and wondering just how they will harvest the red gold. A number of applications for male pickers have already been placed on file in the local employment Office, and this number will be greatly increased this week it was stated this morning by officials of the Bureau.

While it was intimated that farmers will pay five cents per bushel to pickers this figure was not confirmed at an early hour today. Factories are still in need of women peelers and although a great number have already registered as being willing to work, there are still a lot of vacancies to be filled.

ST. ANDREW'S CH. ROSLIN: OBSERVES ITS CENTENINAL

Interior of Church Has Been Newly Re-decorated

Roslin, August 9.—(Special) — In connection with the One Hundredth Anniversary of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Roslin, which is being observed this week, special services were held in the church on Sunday, August the 8th. The interior of the church has recently been redecorated and presented a very pleasing appearance; the front of the church was banked with flowers.

Rev. Mr. MacDonald was in charge of the services; in the morning he was assisted by Rev. Mr. Duncan of Kingston, a former minister, who expressed his thanks to the congregation for their invitation to visit them on their One Hundredth anniversary and felt that he had been honored indeed by being chosen as speaker for the morning service and of the pleasure of meeting old faces tried and true.

Eternal Truth

Mr. Duncan chose as a text for his sermon John 6:6 verses 39-40. These two verses contain two sets of truths, which are the eternal will and purpose of God. The greatest thing in this life is to understand the eternal truths of God. Jesus was sent to fulfil the will of God.

Mr. Duncan referred to the church, the manse, and the cemetery close by (where many improvements have been made in recent years), as a record of past generations. He spoke of the promises of God "that we shall rise all sleep but we shall be changed," and "the dead in Christ shall rise first". Those things which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them, "so shall we ever be with the Lord".

Accept Jesus by looking to him as your personal Saviour and so prepare not for earthly anniversaries, but for the final anniversary. During the service the choir sang an anthem and at the close of the service, the choir and congregation sang "O God of Bethel".

In the evening service the Rev. Alexander Rennie of Vancouver, who was born here and is the keeping of the present century was the preacher, other ministers assisting Rev. MacDonald were Rev. Mr. Duncan of Kingston and Rev. Beazer of the Anglican Church.

Congratulations to Congregation

Mr. Rennie extended his congratulations to the congregation and expressed his pleasure at coming back after so many years absence, regretting the fact that so many of those who were here years ago had passed on, but said the speaker "let us look forward to the time we too will be called".

Rev. Rennie delivered a most inspiring sermon on the subject "Prayer". The text chosen was St. Luke 18:1—"That men ought always to pray and not to faint".

This subject said the speaker had been discussed a great deal in recent years especially since the war.

Many who were taught to pray as children, have given it up, some through disappointment, others because they think they are too busy, or too tired.

Jesus was busy and He taught us ought to pray." Jesus found it necessary for Him, then surely it is necessary for us. It is necessary to Christian Life we will be unable to pray.

Dickens "Death of Little Joe" was referred to by the speaker. We should all be able to say "Our Father" and mean it. God is always glad to have us come to him with our troubles.

Do we pray for the church or do we just go to church to find fault. As it is the duty of the minister to strive earnestly through the week to prepare a worthy message for his people on Sunday, so is it the duty of the people to prepare themselves to receive that message.

Prayer is not words but the spirit that runs through the words.

Rev. Rennie related several incidents in connection with answers to prayer.

In closing he hoped that the efforts of the congregation of St. Andrew's in the years to come would be crowned with success, and that this would be accounted for mainly by prayer.

Rev. MacDonald on behalf of the congregation, extended thanks to all those who had taken part in any way towards the success of the services.

The choir of the Foxboro Church was in charge of the musical part of the evening service.

POLICE COURT

The Police Court docket before Magistrate R. J. Butler K.C. this morning was rather a light one although there were a number of cases listed for decision.

Following a report on Dundas Street East shortly after seven o'clock on Saturday eve, a motorist appeared charged with reckless driving and on the request of his counsel, R. D. Arnold, the case was remanded until Friday. No plea was taken nor any evidence offered. Constable Evans stated in the report after his investigation that a car allegedly turned north in the face of an oncoming car proceeding easterly on Dundas Street, while the other car was proceeding easterly on the same street.

A motorist paid $10 and costs for reckless driving and had his permit suspended for two days when he pleaded guilty to the charge.

Another case was laid over until Friday for judgment after evidence had been given. Traffic Officer Ring stated, that the motorist came out of Market Square only to Front Street and "cut in" twice before reaching the traffic light and then was forced to have the rear end of his car into the south bound traffic lane. The officer stated he was forced to the left to avoid him proceeding north on account of a car coming out of Front Street and at no time was his car in high gear until he reached the intersection. An occupant of the car corroborated this evidence to Frank Cushing, who appeared for the defendant.

David Cole, 17, was charged with vagrancy and remanded till Friday. He told the court he was not guilty and was on his way from New Brunswick to St. Catharines to secure employment. Investigation will be made by the Provincial Police respecting this young man before Friday.

Harold Craig was given judgment for three and one half days' pay from William Ackerman when he told his story to the court. The man stated he worked on the farm and had tried several times to collect the money.

DECORATION DAY SOLEMN OCCASION

Veterans Remember Comrades of War Days by Decorating Graves

Once again the streets of the city resounded to the tramp, tramp of the martial music and the rhythmic movements of marching feet yesterday of the city and district, with the colored berets of the different fighting divisions of the Canadian Expeditionary Force splashing the marching columns with vivid splotches of color and medals throwing back a radiant from the sunshine, again paid tribute to the memory of their fallen comrades when they held their anniversary, the annual Decoration Day parade to Belleville Cemetery, and the closing service, the choir and congregation sang "O God of Bethel".

In the evening service the Rev. Alexander Rennie of Vancouver, who was born here and is the keeping of the present century was the preacher, other ministers assisting Rev. MacDonald were Rev. Mr. Duncan of Kingston and Rev. Beazer of the Anglican Church.

MINOR ACCIDENTS ON DISTRICT ROADS

No Injury Results in Any But Damage to Vehicles

The village of Foxboro was plunged in darkness early today when a car driven by Alfred Wright of Foxboro, went out of control on the Belleville-Foxboro highway and smashed off a hydro pole. Three occupants besides the driver, in the car escaped injury, according to Traffic Officer Sam Irvine, who investigated. Live wires off the pole were thrown across the highway by the accident and it was necessary to call out the Hydro employees to repair the damage. No charges have been laid according to the officer.

An accident allegedly caused by a sideswipe occurred near Weymark's hook on Highway number two three miles east of this city, shortly after eleven o'clock on Sunday night. Traffic Officer Sam Irvine investigating. Leo Rouif of Point Anne, was proceeding easterly, while a car driven by William Flagler of this city was travelling in a westward direction. Considerable damage was caused the Rouif car, the result of the sideswipe. No charges were laid, the officer allowing the parties to settle their differences amicably.

Fog Responsible

Heavy fog with resulting poor visibility was responsible for serious damages to a car on the Marmora-Belleville highway on Saturday night, when a car driven by Ernest Carter, Holloway, came into collision with an automobile driven by Lloyd Blue of Madoc.

According to a statement issued by Provincial Police officers proceeding slowly in opposite directions and owing to the poor visibility, were hugging the centre of the highway. Following the impact, the Carter car which was proceeding in a northerly direction swerved into the east ditch crashed through a fence and glopped on a nearby field. The Blue car, which was forced into the opposite ditch was forced back to the road in the nick of time, narrowly missing a rock fence.

There were no injuries. Provincial Police Constable W. H. MacBrien, who investigated the accident stated that due to the fact, that the affair was purely accidental there would be no charges laid.

Brakes Relined

Sudden seizure of brakes when the driver of a car proceeding along the Belleville-Trenton highway last night, attempted to turn out and pass a car ahead of him resulted in slight damage being done to cars owned by a man named Ward of Oshawa and M. Wright of Belleville.

Ward, it is stated, was driving his car east of three automobiles and had turned out and passed two of the cars, when he noticed an automobile approaching in the opposite direction. Attempting to cut back into line Ward applied the brakes which promptly seized, hurling the car across the highway almost in front of the oncoming car and swinging back onto the road in time to strike the right rear fender of the oncoming Wright automobile.

Provincial Constable MacBrien who investigated the affair stated that the damages were amicably settled and the accident was of a purely accidental nature, no charges would result.

STRANGE PICNIC IN ARCTIC CIRCLE

Lord Tweedsmuir Enjoys Blueberry Pie With Millionaire as Cook

By GUS E. RHOADES

Edmonds, N.W.T., Aug. 9 (CP)—Lord Tweedsmuir left this northernmost mining camp for Fort Smith, 400 miles to Edmonton, after enjoying Saturday what was probably the world's strangest picnic on which food was cooked by a millionaire and one of his luncheon companions was a sick Eskimo woman.

The Governor-General was taken by Harry Oakes, Canadian gold miner, to Oakes' private Arctic Circle camp, where he met natives and had a cup of tea at the Eskimo Canadian Mounted Police barracks.

Captain Congratulated.

There he learned the Hudson's Bay Company ship Fort James had been sunk in an ice pack and he visited the R.C.M.P. boat St. Roch which rescued Captain R. J. Summers and eleven others aboard the Fort James. His Excellency congratulated Captain Summers on his escape.

Airplanes than took off for an unnamed lake in the middle of the barrens where they landed and took ashore armchairs and lunches. Snyder cooked a beef steak and the menu included a dessert of blueberry pie, tea and coffee cake.

Lord Tweedsmuir remarked that "blueberry pie is the best pie in the world and if I've found nothing else that alone would have been worth my coming to Canada".

Then the temperature on which the food was placed sat such northern notables as Leigh Brintnell, general manager of Mackenzie Airways, Mrs. Brintnell, Pilots Stan MacMillan and Andrew Mynarsky and Flight Lieut. Dave Harding.

IS BACHELOR, DRIVES ALONE

So George A. Hoey Never Has Back Seat Advice

"No, Sub, I have no encumbrances. I am not married, nor do I carry any passengers. I ride alone and find that I am a great deal better off. I am not bothered with back-seat drivers, and have my own code of driving rules. By that I do not mean that I differ from the laws of the land, but in my way of driving through—it is a personal code of my own and the fact that I am now on my fifth transcontinental trip from Prince to Halifax and have not had a single accident speaks for itself."

So said Mr. George A. Hoey, a San Francisco business man who passed in the city this morning for a few minutes before continuing his journey to the Maritimes.

Mr. Hoey, who appears to be in the pink of condition, and a great big huge fellow to boot, was asked whether his family was with him. A pair of blue eyes twinkled as his answering the curious reporter. "I am single, have no encumbrances, and usually ride and drive alone. On one occasion I brought my brother with me as far as Detroit and he took the wheel for several hundred miles. I spent my time comparing my code of driving either with his or that I was driving and I suppose he did likewise. I was not satisfied although my brother is a good driver. It is much more satisfying to me to drive my own way."

Is Never Lonesome

"Don't you ever get terribly lonesome at times when you are on those long hikes," he was asked? "No, on the contrary, I find myself the best of company. I am not much given to conversation and do not have to put up with driving suggestions. This is my fifth trip from Frisco to the Atlantic seaboard, although this is the first time I have come this way."

He wiped away a few drops of perspiration from a glistening forehead. "This weather is just right," he declared. "I think you people here think it is humid and warm today, and it is, but it is a darned sight better than what we have here in January. Not for me," laughing this time, was the reply of Sunny State. "One month of cool or cold weather is all I can stand, and five months would finish me."

His best friend is his car, he said. "We are practically inseparable, and I think more of this one than any I have owned. I bought it in Florida two years ago and we have been pals and friends ever since.

Mr. Hoey although he regards California as his home is not a native son, as he puts it. For a number of years he conducted business in New York state, then in the State of California and now he has resided there ever since.

STUDY FRENCH FOR CONVERSATION

No Opposition Expected Says Deputy Minister

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 9 (CP)—The Ontario Department of Education intends to change the teaching of French languages in the schools so pupils may learn to use it for practical conversation, Dr. Duncan McArthur, Deputy Minister of Education, declared here yesterday at the Canadian Institute on Hockneins and Politics. He told the Geneva Park Conference he expected no opposition to bi-lingualism.

"I think a very definite change has come about in the attitude of a large number of English people who are neighbors of French-speaking Canadians regarding the necessity of learning French," he said.

THOUSANDS ENJOY SPLENDID CONCERT

Massed Bands of R.C.A.F. And Belleville Delight With Varied Program

Easily one of the outstanding band concerts of the season occurred last night at the Fair Grounds when the massed bands of the R.C.A.F., Trenton and the Belleville Municipal Band under the baton of Lieut. Fred Johnson and Sergeant Cooper, R.C.A.F., rendered a variable program of martial and other airs before an enthusiastic crowd, which numbered easily in the vicinity of three thousand.

The grounds immediately surrounding the bandstand were packed with people, while cars packed every available inch of parking space.

With nearly sixty bandsmen playing selection, which both stirred and soothed, the large gathering gave vent to their feelings with prolonged applause, while car siren and horns added to the general noise of appreciation.

A distinct novelty in a program which left nothing to be desired from a musical standpoint, was the trumpet solo by Sergt. Cooper, R.C.A.F. His first effort receiving well-merited applause, a distinct hush fell over the gathering, when suddenly from a distance the clear bell-like notes of the trumpet were heard in encore. The massed bands played a soft accompaniment while the audience sat and stood in silence. Loud and prolonged applause greeted this fine musical effort. Equally as good and as much enjoyed was the trombone solo, offered by that popular member of the Belleville band, Reg. Wardle. This too was generously applauded with Wardle playing an encore.

The commonly Hymn-sing in which three favorite hymns were played and sung by the crowd, struck a popular note. Lieut. Johnson, in the role of song-leader and master of ceremonies did a fine job and is to be complimented on his superb handling of the concert. Sergt. Cooper, besides demonstrating his ability as a musician wielded the baton in a number of the selections played and proved that he is a conductor of splendid ability.

The announcement that the hymn-sings would be included in future concerts brought forth years of applause from the gathering.

That the band is increasing in popularity, if that is possible, was evidenced last night at the Fair Grounds, and the appreciation of the band itself of the interest being shown by the general public is manifested in the splendid concerts now being offered. The program:

O Canada
March, United Empire (Hughes)

Letors to the Editor

WET SHEET AND FLOWING SEA

To the Editor of The Ontario-Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—

These international boat races along the American Coast in mid-summer when the wind is a zephyr breeze, makes me tired. Let us have the next race with a wet sheet and a flowing sea and a wind that follows fast and the result will be reversed every time. The great sea dogs, the British, do not build boats for a zephyr breeze but for a wet sheet and a flowing sea and a wind that follows fast. The zephyr breeze racing is a farce and nothing else. Why not wait for a real wind before starting then there would be a real interesting and exciting race.

Yours truly,
D. H. ACKERILL, Y.S.,
Belleville.

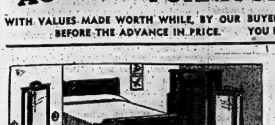
THE LONELY THREE

Dear Editor,—



Allow me a few lines in your valuable paper as a visitor at Belleville Decoration Day on Sunday with every credit due to all who took part in the service. After that beautiful service, passing by your War monument, Station Street, we saw it decorated with beautiful flowers by those "lonely three" wearing different berets. I can never forget the uniform way and solemnity with which the ceremony was performed by those "lonely three" who honored their and our dead. I have to express my feelings.

A Soldier's Mother.

Editor's Note—The three mentioned in the above letter were three Veterans, delegated by the United Veterans to place floral tributes on the cenotaph on Station Street, while the general decoration of graves was taking place in Belleville and St. James' Cemetery.

FINAL OFFENSIVE BY INSURGENTS

Last Government Strong-Hold in North Spain Bombed

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 9 (AP)—General Franco's northern forces today launched what insurgent officers called their "final offensive" against the provinces of Asturias and Santander, last government stronghold in north Spain.

Insurgent planes and artillery bombed government defence lines in the Biscayan sector in an effort to wipe out the government resistance on the Basque-Austrian front.

Insurgents reports declared the bombardment was as intense as the deadly fire poured onto the ironing of fortifications encircling Bilbao before that Basque capital fell in June.

The northern sector had been quiet since the insurgents advanced through Bilbao and a short distance along the highway to Santander. It was believed renewed hostilities meant Franco hoped to mop up the region before fall in order to release his northern concentration of troops and war equipment for use on the Madrid front or elsewhere.

Won't Reveal Point

Insurgent officers at Irun, though opening it the final offensive, declined to reveal the point from which the drive started.

The embattled government pushed its Albarracin sector line north and due into position blocking the insurgent threat to the Cuenca-Teruel Highway, key to communications linking Madrid and Valencia. Government scouts reconnoitered the towns of Guadalaviar and Villadel Cobo, advancing the government vanguard within sight of Orneos, western-most point of the insurgent salient now the centre of civil war operations.

Bellefront dispatches indicated both sides were digging in for trench warfare such as has ranged around Madrid for more than nine months.

SIR JOHN'S GRAVE

The grave of Sir John A. Macdonald in Cataraqui Cemetery has been appearing in the new of late owing to the fact that all relatives of the Confederation Prime Minister have passed from this earthly scene and no one remains to pay the cost of upkeep of the last resting place of the Father of Confederation. No maintenance has been paid since 1928 when Sir Hugh Macdonald, son of the Prime Minister, died. The other day the Cataraqui Cemetery Board stated that there was no intention to repossess part of the plot and that the Cataraqui Cemetery would maintain the plot.

It is true of Sir John Macdonald as of many others who do great service that they do not care for what the future holds in store beyond a good name as citizen and individual. It is also true that in the time of his death forty-six years ago perpetual care was not the rule of cemeteries. Today after an experience of years such has become the rule of many cemeteries and is a guarantee of the maintenance of burial plots even when the last relative is gone.

It would seem to be the duty of Canada as a whole to see that the graves of such public men as Sir John A. Macdonald were maintained in perpetuity by the people of this nation.

Canadians must honor the memory of this great man who was one of those who made Confederation possible and ended the undesirable situation which had developed. Confederation was the only thinkable way out of the dilemma and it would undoubtedly have come in 1867 or later, unless something unforeseen happened. Yet British North America might have remained as in the case of Newfoundland today, with provinces separated had it not been for the band of patriots who thought out Confederation and placed Macdonald at their head.

Macdonald combined in himself an unusual number of the finest attributes of the public man or statesman. He was the amiration of the people. No one quite like him has appeared in Canadian history, though our history is enriched by a glorious company of men from the days of the Jacques Cartier down to the present, men of whom this nation is justly proud, and men who have given Canada her place among the nations of the world, though she is one of the smaller and younger of them.

It is true of nations as of men that a leading man or a leading characteristic may transform the national outlook or the career of the individual. Macdonald was one of those men who played a part in national history greater than might be expected from one man.

Montreal Gazette says: "It is unthinkable that this shrine should be left to fate.

"John Alexander Macdonald was a native of Glasgow, but was brought to Canada by his father in 1820, at the age of five. His early years were spent in and around Kingston, where he was educated in the same public school as Oliver Mowat. In 1844 he was elected to the provincial Legislature as member for Kingston and from then onward played a foremost part in the political life of Canada. Always he was a staunch Canadian, which fact he proved time and again strongly opposing annexation movements and anything calculated to divide Canadians. In the middle of the nineteenth century, when Canada, torn by dissension promoted by political extremists, sadly showed the need of moderate and sane government, Macdonald succeeded in welding the reasonable elements in the ranks of the old Reformers and the Tories into one patriotic party, defined as Liberal-Conservative. Later, in 1857, with the aid of Cartier, he formed an administration which steered a straight course through the then difficult years. When a deadlock arose between Upper and Lower Canada, Macdonald espoused the Confederation scheme, persuading recalcitrant supporters to join with him and overcoming the hesitancy of some of the provinces. It required patience and tact to encompass the Union, and even after Confederation Macdonald had to exercise all his genius to get Joseph Howe to abandon his anti-Confederation campaign and join the Dominion Cabinet. On Macdonald's death in 1891, his great political opponent, Sir Wilfred Laurier, said of him, in part: "For the supreme art of governing men Sir John Macdonald was gifted as few men in any land or in any age were gifted —gifted with the highest of all qualities, qualities which would have made him famous wherever exercised and which would have shone all the more conspicuously the larger the theatre. He was also endowed with those inner, subtle, undeniable graces of soul, which win and keep the hearts of men."

There is as much need now as in Macdonald's day for the reasonable elements in public life to work for moderate and sane government. Surely the grave of the man who did so work should be maintained in proper condition, and assurance has now been given that this will be done, Garrett Tyrrell, secretary of the Central Conservative Association, announcing that he will accept responsibility for raising a fund forthat purpose. The inscription on Sir John's modest tombstone simply states his name, followed by (1815-1891. He rests)"

TRAMP PRINTER'S DREAM

Same old office, in the same old town,
Same old staff, from the foreman down,
Same old devil with the same old leer,
Same old comps, with a smell of beer;
Gosh, but it seems I'm the same old jay,
Goin' back to work in the same old way.

Same old stone in the same old place,
Same old ads, in the same old chase,
Same old galleys on the same old dump,
Same old 'sulphur' at the 'press-day jump'
Gosh, but I feel like the same old jay
Poundin' the planer in the same old way

Same old broom and the same old floor,
Same old pi in the cracks galore,
Same old stove with the pipes awry,
Same old soldiers all chawed out dry.
Gosh, but I'm thinking I'm the same old jay
Sweepin' up the floor in the same old way.

Same old bosses with the same old growl,
Same old wash tub and same old towel,
Same old lye pot, just as it stands,
Same old cracks in the devil's hands.
Gosh, but I reckon I'm the same old jay
Washin' up the rollers in the same old way.

Same old cases and the same old type,
Same old pressman with the same old pipe,
Same old press with the same old drum,
Same old fines that rise on the bum.
Gosh, let me fix them so they'll have to stay
With a nail and a mallet in the good old way.

THREE BIRTHDAYS OF THREE GENERATIONS OF DAVYS were celebrated in Iroquois, Ontario, recently when descendants of a pioneer who left the Mohawk Valley in New York State in 1785, as a United Empire Loyalist, to settle on a 400-acre grant on the Bay of Quinte, gathered to mark the event. Miss Amanda Frances Davy, one of the fifth generation in Canada; her niece, Margaret Etta Davy, and Willis Earl Boisclaire, great nephew of Miss Davy and eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Boisclaire, celebrated birthdays at this family gathering. All are descendants of the father, Colonel John Davy, U.E.L. whose marriage at St. John's Anglican Church in Bath, which he named after his home town in Wales, is said to be the first recorded in this historic church.

ANCIENT HONORABLE AND ROMANTIC FALL RIVER LINE of steamboats with quaint Quaker and New England names running between New York City and Fall River, Massachusetts, will soon be a thing of the past. Crews hastened the death of this ancient line by indulging in a sit-down strike. As the boats have been losing money for years the owners thought it would be a good time to sit-down strike, too, and consequently dismantled the boats and sent them to the boneyard. The Priscilla, sidewheeler, was the first to hear the death sentence and sadly moved up New York's dirty old East River in tow of a tug—what ignominy for this proud mistress of the Atlantic coast. Operated as a subsidiary of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railway the line has been losing money and there is an application before the court for permission to sell or scrap nine vessels: Priscilla, Commonwealth, Providence, Plymouth, Chester W. Chapin, City of Lowell, Pequonnock, New Haven. The Providence Line and the New Bedford Line were discontinued earlier this year. When the National Maritime Union, C.I.O. affiliate, started crippling strikes on the steamers the company decided to cease operations, unprofitable under present conditions and promising to be more so if union demands were complied with.

CHAPTER XXX.

Major Mead was mightily chagrined to find himself bad-ridden the day after what he soothingly called "a little faint spell". He said to Kate apologetically, "I reckon you'll have to send me to that old soldiers' home you were talkin' about, now I'm such a nuisance."

Kate shook her head. "I was a fool to suggest that, Grandad. I don't know whatever made me. You don't look ill spiritual me, do you?"

He patted her hand. "There's not as sweet a girl as you on this green earth, Kate—except Caroline, of course. I don't count myself a poor man or one to be pitied, as long as I've got my two granddaughters. Who's that downstairs, baby?"

"It's Mr. Howard. Caroline's talking to him."

"What does he want?"

"To ask after your health, I reckon. Would the poor balmroached this morning. Grandad"—"that would be nice. Like a preacher . . . It was Jeff Howard that helped Kate to get me to bed yesterday. He's a mighty kind fellow."

"Um-m. Try to sleep now, while I fan. It's a hot day."

Downstairs Jeff was saying to Caroline, "I'll bring more ice this evening." stooped by to tell you to count on it. I'd gladly bring whiskey and brandy only I reckon you don't want to give it to the old gentleman."

"No, we don't, Mr. Howard. He's too fond of it." Caroline was surprised to find herself thinking of Jeff Howard as a confidential friend. She had been doing so ever since he came to her rescue yesterday. "Ice is the greatest gift you could offer. I've been able to keep two ice bags filled for Grandad. Besides, the rest of us enjoy the ice, too."

Their eyes met. Caroline felt that the very atmosphere was charged with Kate, whose name he would not speak. She said impulsively, holding out her hand. "Try not to mind if my sister seems hard and unforgiving, Mr. Howard. Life hurts her more than it hurts most people because she bumps into it without dodging. She was always like that, even as a little thing. Uncompromising."

He shook hands without an answer . . . went away. Caroline pitied him because he was inarticulate. She was reminded of the time Steve broke his leg and had shown his suffering only in his eyes.

Mid-afternoon and a strange car before the house. Caroline and Kate, looking down cautiously from an upper window, saw a young man get out and consult the name on the mail box.

Kate exclaimed, "It's—it's that Neilson boy."

"Who?" asked Caroline blankly.

"Carl Neilson. Your fan. Your public. He sent me a letter once, raving and yelled into my ear to ask who you were. Gave him your address, but I thought he'd only write a letter."

Downstairs Hilary was admitting the caller. They could hear her politely invite him to step in and sit on the table and sit down.

"Some one to see you, Miss Caroline. "He'll expect you to look pretty. I'll help you with your toilet. Shall he right down?"

A quick change of clothing, fragrant powder, eagle run through hair already smooth and shining and Caroline was ready.

Kate, sitting beside her sleeping grandfather and mechanically fanning him, heard the murmur of voices below. Two hours of it. Then the man took his departure and Caroline came running upstairs and into the room, starry-eyed.

"Guess what!" she said in an ecstatic whisper. "He's from a Louisville station and he's come to have an audition."

Kate arose and they did a dance together in jubilation. They had indulged in this ecstatic antic on best childhood, wherever joy overtook them. They danced out of the room now, out into the hall, down hallway and into their own room, when they had come to a stop and stared at one another with delight. "Tell all!" Kate implored dramatically.

"Isn't it astounding?" Caroline said. "He's not married."

Kate was impatient. "I'm not interested in Mr. Neilson's private life. What about your chances? Go on, Yak!"

"Yes . . . Well his radio station has a sponsor who's looking for a program. They have been auditioning for half an hour every week day from 7 to 7.30. They had in mind simple ballads. That sort of thing. Mr. Neilson's been scouting for someone. When he heard me, he thought he'd do. I'm to have an audition in the morning at the studio. At 10.30. Oh, Kate, can this be it? But maybe I'm not what the others. Don't let me be too hopeful. Kate!"

"It's your duty to be hopeful. After all, that practically is definitely. You're practically a radio star. With the amplifier, I mean."

That's what Kate herself said. He said I emigrate almost as well as—oh—Kate, I'm afraid to repeat it! You'll think I'm crazy."

"Oh, no."

"—as Jessica Dragonette. He says there's the same tonal quality in me that only has to be controlled and cultivated. He says I must study more with a really good teacher at once, if I'm accepted. Oh, honey, suppose it comes true!

"Better. I didn't tell him why you went to Louisville. Well"—

"They've accepted me," said Kate. Here's my contract." They walked to the porch and sat on the steps and wept in each other's arms.

"Seventy dollars a week!" Caroline announced incredulously.

"Oh, Caroline! For doing something we love to do!"

"I've planned it all out, Kate. I'm going to do my final work at the University and get my degree. I'll have to, I reckon, because I want I'll live as cheaply as possible and send home all I can."

They laughed and wept again, until Hilary came out and stared at them, hands on hips, and asked sarcastically, "What's de trouble now? Is de sky fall?"

X X

Caroline's work was to start at once, so a telegram informed her, and the first broadcast would take place the following Monday.

There followed quickly, then, advertisements on the radio pages of the newspapers announcing the program's advent and carrying Caroline Mead's picture in the 1930 ball gown. News columns mentioned that Caroline Mead, who was to be heard on daily evening broadcasts from 7 to 7.30, was a Kentucky girl a granddaughter of Major Sam Mead of Shelby and daughter of the late Captain Merriweather Mead, who was killed at Chateau Thierry in the World War.

Shelby took its new celebrity to its heart and there followed for Caroline four or five days of pleasant attention rendered by her surprised townspeople.

Kate said, with a slightly malicious delight, "Caroline, you ought to be heard by Grandad, Caroline! They've looked on as extinct."

Major Mead had to be told, since Caroline must have home, but all details were kept from him. It would be best for him not to know particulars, they felt, inasmuch as he might suffer sympathetically from "mike fright" and render himself ill again.

In the days that followed Jeff Howard continued to bring ice and to inquire after the sick man.

Through Abby he sent "congratulations to Miss Caroline." That was all. He never encountered Kate during his brief visits and he had no way of knowing whether this accidental is omitted in accordance on her part. He only knew that his heart pounded suffocatingly when he approached the ugly little house that sheltered her; that when he had driven away a great loneliness settled around it like the pain of mourning. What it was that made life worth living.

Kate had decided not to time in for Caroline's first broadcast. Yet, when Caroline's hours were over she felt more and more impelled to listen. At 6.58 she was fingering the dials excitedly, ready to tune in, parched blur of sound that left her trembling. The next, when they'd used—an accident, undependable affair at best—spreckled from batteries, and these, evidently, were sadly in need of being charged.

Kate suddenly felt that she must hear Caroline's first broadcast of she could not stand it. Caroline would be in the studio now, comparing herself, looking over her notes. In 10 minutes she would be on air.

The thought was too much for Kate. She ran from the house, jumped into the sedan that stood in the driveway and drove like mad toward Grand Mead, almost as unerring-ly as a bird winging its way home.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The front door stood open. Kate ran in, calling excitedly, "Jeff! Jeff!"

He came toward her. To him, too, it seemed natural. He had always dreamed that she would come like this one day.

They went into the front parlor, where, she saw, he had added to the touch of his own save the radio. . . . Kate had begun to sing. The fine, powerful receiving set was humming her gear young voice into the room as if she herself were present.

It the gloaming, oh, my darling, When the lights are soft and low, Will you think of me, my darling, As you did so long ago—

Caroline's voice vibrating thru' the big old parlors where she had often sung . . . over there, Caroline's self, the boy still linked . . . over here the old mahogany sofa where she, Kate, had sat so often listening.

When the song had died away Kate met Jeff Howard's eyes. He did not seem a foreign presence in this room. He, too, somehow belonged here, also with Caroline's self and the old furniture and the old memories of childhood. "Jeff," she said brokenly, putting out her hand. "I'd like you to know I don't mind any more your being here. I've been wicked. I'm sorry and ashamed."

"Kate," he said. "Little Kate!" She was in his arms, close, just as she had dreamed she would be. She was crying. "How can you love me when I've been such a devil?" And he was replying, "I've been a devil, too. I've loved you harder and harder for years. I think I'm going to die, Kate—"

"Die, darlin'—"

Caroline began to sing "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." They did not hear it. They were living it.

X X

Caroline was lunching with Carl Neilson. Their broadcast—their four-day association necessitated by the launching her program had made them well acquainted and very fond of one another.

She said, after he had ordered, "Would you mind, Carl, if I read this letter from my sister? It came just as I was leaving the studio. I'm still anxious about my grandfather."

"Read it!" he told her. "Then I can expect more attention."

She had scarcely begun before she uttered a quick exclamation. "My sister's going to be married! Next Tuesday, if I can be there!"

X X

Carl Neilson laughed. "The girl with the reddish hair. I met her before I met you." He lit a cigaret and watched Caroline's sensitive face as she devoured the letter, now forgetful of his presence.

This is whats Kate had written: "My Dearest Sister: I'm marrying Jeff Howard Tuesday afternoon if you can get down out from the city that day. Can you? Answer, please!"

When this reaches you you'll be a veteran of several broadcasts. I heard your first song and it was lovely. You didn't sound frightened; just alive and happy. I didn't hear any more because Jeff had my ears muffled. I was at Mead Mendown, listening over his radio, with him.

"You see, it was this way. At first I thought I couldn't bear the sight of him, but I found I could look off. Then I felt I had to. Jeff-Kate was worse than unwelcome—he hurt. It was 6.30 o'clock. I got in the car and drove like mad to Mead Meadows to listen there. Don't ask me why I didn't go to the Eddis. They're nearer and they have a good radio. I simply didn't. I drove to Jeff Howard's as if that were the only place on earth to go. Honey, excuse me while I'm crying—I've noticed how gorgeous-looking he is in his rough way? Like Gary Cooper, sort of—

Caroline looked up to exclaim to Carl Neilson, "Heavens! She's comparing him with Gary Cooper. Wait—listen!"

She went on reading: "He's loved me almost from the first, Caroline, though hating me, too, he admits. Grandad (who's much better by the way) is utterly amazed and pleased and wants to know when the shooting took place. Abby and Zeke also are pleased, but baffled. But you will understand. We were courting when I was digging up his roots. He and he was shooting me in the shoulder; when he was bringing my horse to torment me, and I was setting his house afire. That's why we're so mad about each other now and can't wait any longer to be married.

"Let me know if Tuesday at 4 will suit you. At the church. As my only attendant, you'll want a pretty sweet dress—you'll have money to buy it now because we shan't have Gerald's salary. I'm sending something simple, as I'm going to have considerable trouble finding dress rather than Grandmother's satin and lace. Two tailors are working night and day on Jeff to eliminate that mountain look when he dons his evening clothes.

"Your same, only infinitely happier, Kate."

P. S.—Bring Carl Neilson if you still like him and if he wants to come."

X X

Caroline looked up from the letter. "Tuesday at 4," she said, "is our little church in Shelby. You're invited, if you care to go."

"I do," he answered emphatically. "We'll drive in his car."

Have to get you back here before 7. Does the ceremony please you?"

"Yes," thoughtfully. "I believe it's the only thing in the world that would tame my sister and make her contented. She's been obsessed with love of mixing up other their paths crossed. . . . He "foreclosed a mortgage on Mead Meadows—his place where we were born and reared. . . . He's wealthy, successful, Coal lands, I believe. Kate's insulated him in a hundred ways, and he hasn't thought back. They were drawn to each other with a perfectly terrible inevitableness."

"A mountaineer," Neilson remarked with interest. "Has the most strong silent men who tote guns and grudges."

"Not a recluse," Caroline defended. "Rather fine and sensitive. I'd say. . . . Carl, please! He has drawls rather worse than the drawl of mixing up other men and then he uses a double negative. Oh, there'll be things about him to pride Kate, of course, but she's so much in love to mind."

"Young Mr. Neilson looked at the girl he had "discovered." "I appreciate your confidence, Caroline. You 'southern gentry' inter-marry too much for your own good. Your best products of creative genius. Take you, for instance. An ideal husband for you, I should say, and a chap under 30, just a generation removed from Norway. Somebody's who's more interested in music than horses. Somebody with a fine, clean, southern cooking, doesn't call you 'Honey' and has never bothered to use a 'double negative.' Somebody who has lots of enthusiasm for the future of the coal industry—and me, too. But I'll give you until June to think it over. I like women with college degrees."

Caroline blushed. "What an unnecessary remark! Of course I'm practical."

"Don't regret that word 'cold' little one. We Norsemen have a reputation for being cold until we find out. Eat your chop. You're stenchi. I could swear to it. I want you to hay a bloo coun taken at once, then start the right tonic. Anemia's bad for a voice."

"I don't know what I like you, really." Caroline told him spitefully.

"No. I'll have to be an acquired taste. You've never known anybody like me. So ungallant, I suppose you'd call it. But I'm beginning to love you. That's not to make a difference. Don't push your custard aside! Eat it!"

X X

Kate and Jeff rode horseback the morning of their wedding day. He had given her Brown Boy as a bridal gift. On his pocket was her wedding gift. He drew it out, leaned from his horse and put it in her hands.

It was a deed to Mead Meadows, making it her property.

"Oh, Jeff! But it's not necessary now! If it belongs to you, and I belong to you, what difference does it make?"

"There's a difference. The land's always been Mead land. Some day Howards will sell it—Mead younger Howards. Through inheritance, and they'll be part Mead." He smiled shyly.

They took the path through the woods, leading home. "Yes, you're right, Jeff. There's something about having it for my own!" She seized a walnut leaf as they passed and pressed it against her cheek. She shut her eyes letting her reason and sense join in the awareness of happiness; her horses beneath her, her hand about her, her new house just beyond.

"People will say, Jeff, that I married you to get my home back. Do you mind?"

"I don't mind what they say. I've got you."

"Jeff, tell me something. Are you a—a snob?"

"Worth about a million, my lawyer says. Is that snobbish?"

Kate laughed. "Then I don't mind either. I'm proud of owning Jeff. I'd like a comfortable, modest cabin for Abby and Zeke. They've got you and you've got me to build it, as he'd planned. Rather—then their grandchild, I mean. Them. They're none of them much good to work, Jeff. And Grandad Grandad himself! I'm bringing you a lot of parasites, dear."

"Walk!" was all Howard said. "Well, have a right good time together." Then, after a quarter mile of woods path, "I thought you grandmother's life is old stuff to me, Kate. He'd feel more natural there."

Kate gave him a grateful look; really mixed with adoration. It went to his heart. He drew his horse alongside and demonstrated that a mountaineer can kiss from horseback very effectively when he puts his mind to it.

THE END.

So Musician Sentenced For Non-Support of Family

Vancouver, Aug. 7. —(CP) — Pasquale Flora, Italian-born musician, was sentenced to three months in jail by Magistrate Mackenzie Matheson in police court yesterday on a charge of non-support, after officials of the Vancouver Relief Department took how he relieved work because he said it would ruin his musical hands.

Mrs. Flora, with seven Canadian-born children, was an unemployed woman for the Relief Department who brought the charges. She told she had taught all the children music.

Flora, when asked his attitude toward relief, said yesterday:

"I never did much work. I do not like to destroy my art. If I go to pick and shovel work I can no longer teach the music."

CELEBRATE 28TH ANNIVERSARY OF WEDDING

The home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Hearns at Frankford, was the scene of a happy event on Saturday, July 31, when Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Daly of Toronto, celebrated their silver wedding anniversary.

The immediate relatives of the bride and groom being present, also

As a Mother-in-Law, "First Lady" Knows the Ropes

At her last Press Conference of the season, Mrs. Roosevelt dropped a pearl of wisdom to all mothers-in-law.

One of the press women asked her if she was going to assist in getting the Junior Franklin D.'s settled in their new home in Charlottesville, as Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt D. is enrolled as a law student.

The First Lady laughed merrily. As long as the young people realized that she had learned the wisdom of letting young people straighten things to suit themselves. She added that if they asked her for any suggestions, she'd be very glad to help out, and intimated that unsought suggestions from mothers-in-law were not the part of wisdom.

Was Mrs. Roosevelt one bad only to see her with any of her children? Not at all. She seemed to loved she is with all of them. The most tactful of women at all times, Mrs. Roosevelt is never glad to see when dealing with her in-laws.

When I get a letter which begins "my son was married last week and—" I always want to stop right there and telegraph the writer: "Whatever you do, don't yield to the temptation of offering any advice to the newlyweds about their affairs. Don't even suggest their affairs."

And I'd like to follow this up with another wire to the daughter-in-law, saying: "Please don't resent your mother-in-law as an enemy. Remember she's human."

Before me is the letter of an elderly woman, full of blotted tears and tragedy, and all because of a can of scouring powder. Her daughter-in-law liked one kind of scouring powder, while she liked another. When the grand-daughters came to visit and used Mama's favorite brand on the new linoleum Grandma suggested the kind she used.

The little girls were recalled. It wasn't the scouring powder, as the daughter-in-law said, but "the principle of it."

As if anything so utterly foolish had the most remote relationship to principle.

Grandma was the petty cleanser in another mother and daughter-in-law row. Son's wife liked it dry, as dust, and the grandmother-in-law liked moist bash with plenty of gravy.

The ladies dodged each other's footsteps like spies from opposing armies, so that they would reach the kitchen first and make hash her way. Every hash was confiscated by the opposing force (whichever it happened to be) and consigned to the garbage pail, and the battle was on. Do you wonder the unhappiness which resulted from the house, leaving the belligerents to settle the hash-making question in their own belligerent ways.

The simple solution would have been to had two moist hash one time and dry the next, or to have two good sports about it and laugh it off.

Window drapery as a cyclone cellar is the modern equivalent of politics, religion or how to rear children. Some women want straight curtains, and some want straight curtains in the other!

If mothers-in-law would treat their sons' wives as they do their own daughters, it would be the beginning of the millenium. And if daughters-in-law would only shed that immemorial chip on their shoulders, before entering into relations with husbands' mothers, fewer wrinkles in foreheads would result.

Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Laughlan of Trenton, who were bridesmaid and best man.

After receiving the guests, a bounteous dinner was served, the wedding cake was then cut by the bride, gifts presented, and an evening of music enjoyed by all present.

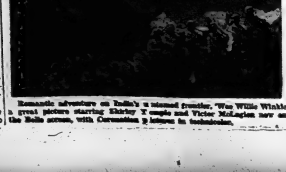
Weddings



RYAN—GARTLEY

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gartley, George Street, was the scene of a pretty wedding event on Saturday afternoon, when their youngest daughter, Ana Florence, was united in marriage to Mr. Frank Ryan of this city.

The rooms were beautifully decorated with gladioli and hydrangeas. The ceremony was performed by the bride's brother, the Rev. David St. Clare, B.A., B.D., of Port Credit, in the double Brown playeer the wedding march.

The bride was attired in a gown of white satin made in panel lines and wore a white flower turban. She carried a shower of pink roses and lilies of the valley.

She was attended by her little niece, Dorothy Dobbs, wearing a pink taffeta gown and pink bonnet and carrying a nosegay of roses and sweet peas. After the reception and buffet luncheon, the young couple left on a motor trip around the Muskoka Lakes. Upon their return they will reside in Belleville

A Light Near Child's Bed Is Urged

Consideration Should be Given by Parents to His Fear of Dark

By LISA GRENELLE

"WHEN ALAN FARRINGDAN was a little boy, he had slept for four years alone in a room; and every night for four years he had been afraid. But he had never told his parents, and was cured for nothing so much as his happiness and serenity of mind. And the fear which the little tyke had so dreadfully felt was still in the face of the years of 20."

So I read. And there are many, many Alan Farringdans in the world; grown men and women going about with the mark of a childhood fear still on their faces and in their hearts, handicapping and coloring all progress and behavior.

Most children, especially sensitive, imaginative children, are afraid of being alone in the dark. It is so common and usual a fear that I suspect it has some primitive, atavistic cause. At any rate it is something for which we should do well to educate our own young, brave and aggressive though they may be in the daytime.

Some Exaggerate

Some children, of course, will leave you no doubt as to their fears. In fact, they will exaggerate, shrieking and crying and your sympathy and in order to get the full benefit of the fear is available setting hour. That is one of the reasons why you must let the child know that you expect him to be afraid, or get the idea that you, yourself, consider there is anything to be afraid of.

Another reason for this necessity—setting up the fear

POINT ANNE ENTERS FINALS

Defeat Belle-Sargent 4-2 in Third And Deciding Semi-Final Game

Behind the masterful hurling of Bateman who let the opposition down with seven scattered hits the Point Anne softball squad eliminated the Belleville Sargent mudhead or from any participation in city softball playdowns on Saturday night when they defeated them by a 4-2 score to win the right to enter the finals in the city ball title against the winners of the Corbin-Aajmaa squabble.

The game was one of those hard fought affairs with both teams on edge to what was supposed to be a crucial games. While the hits were evenly split both teams getting seven safeties, the Sargent squad faltered in the pinches and by virtue of five errors paved the way for the ultimate victory of the opposition.

Bateman on the mound for the cementmen hurled steady ball scattering the hits of the Sargent with the exception of the second chukker when a single by McMartin and Gray's double sent the initial run across the plate. From that point until the ninth innings the tall hurler was never in difficulties in his mitts but a wave of singles followed by Hughes' ringing double allowed the second and last Belleville Sargent run over the pan.

Schuster on the mound for Sargent also allowed but seven hits but his team's bobbles and a slight inclination to wards wildness at the wrong moment spoiled an otherwise fine performance.

Point Anne added to their initial lead in the second when Ed Turner when a walk and error, Green's single and Bateman's double to centre helped to clear the bases of scores. Their last tally came in the fifth when Whitehead's single drove in Sero who had singled ahead of him and advanced on an error.

Sargents drew on level terms in the second when they scored a third marker on McMartin's single and Gray's double. They were held scoreless from that point until the ninth, when a belated Sargent rally failed to produce the tying run.

McMartin's trio of one basers brought him the batting spotlight for the Sargent team while Bateman's double and single rounded out a fine all-round performance for the winners.

The lineups:

Point Anne—Murray; Genereaux; Bateman; Gaulin; Sero; Green; Whitehead; Turner; Thummim.

Belle-Sargent—Barriage Bushell; McGuire; Gray; Schuster; Hughes; Robinson; Gray; Schreiderman.

Umpires—Ehler, Bawden.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Farmer Takes a Wife" and "White Fang"

Filmgoers who have been looking for the superlative romance, those who seek drama, and those who prefer adventure will find all these elements combined in the simple, human, love-to-earth story of "The Farmer Takes A Wife", now playing the Capitol as grand revival bit No. 1.

The picture stars Janet Gaynor in one of the most absorbing and tender love stories it has been her privilege to play; it exhibits for the first time the superior talents of the screens' new romantic sensation, Henry Fonda, and it tells a magnificent tale in a style that will leave you troubled and strangely happy at its close.

"The Farmer Takes a Wife", deals with the turbulent glamour and vitality of the Erie Canal scene in the early 1800's and the vivid dramatic conflict from the love of a boy from the farmlands for a girl who was attached to the water life.

Fonda is the boy who takes to the canals to earn enough to buy his own farm. The life of the canal throws him into contact with Janet Gaynor, cook for canal boatier Charles Bickford, and although her complex mixture of their intrinsic differences, Fonda cannot help falling in love with her. She returns his love.

Their love story merges into the story of the canal people as the story proceeds. There are busty, humorous episodes of the skipper with the corps of ship, the preacher who turns dentist, spells of community singing in which the principals render racy American ballads, brawls, fist fights and liquor bouts.

During all this period, Fonda is trying to woo Miss Gaynor away from the canal, trying to show how the despised steam trains have doomed the canals. But it is not until after the harrowing climax in which Fonda gives Bickford, the bully of the waterways, a taste of his own medicine that she will listen to his pleadings.

The picture abounds in beautiful, varied characterization but those most worthy of mention are the performance by Miss Gaynor and Fonda, Andy Devine, Roger Imhof, Jane Withers and Margaret Hamilton.

"White Fang"

The lawless North-country, vibrant with romance and drenched with drama, once again flashes across the screen in "White Fang".

Jack London's thrill-laden sequel to his "Call of the Wild", now playing the Capitol as revival bit No. 2.

Featuring an exceptional cast, headed by Michael Whalen and Jean Muir, and including Slim Summerville, Charles Winninger, the original "Capn Henry" of radio fame, John Barrymore, Jane Darwell and Thomas Beck, "White Fang" is a stirring story of adventure ranking with the screen's greatest outdoor dramas.

Last complete show at 8.30.

AT THE BELLE

"Wee Willie Winkie" Famed Kipling Story

Adventure as only Rudyard Kipling could write it, blazes from the screen in the new Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of his "Wee Willie Winkie", which opened Saturday at the Belle Theatre with Shirley Temple and Victor McLaglen in the starring roles.

Adventure..... rugged as the skilled Highlanders holding Kyber Pass, masterful as India's proud and brazen hussy, strange, as the skirling bagpipes in the roof of Asia, romantic as Empire's last untamed frontier this every moment of this exciting film, the most spectacular production in which Shirley Temple has ever appeared.

When the bonnie plaid of Scotland flashes on India's saffron hills and war-mad tribesmen skrim from Khyber Pass, when the rifles crack and their pahans rad, when the bagpipes skirl and "Marching Through Georgia"—you'll know that you're seeing one of the greatest pictures ever made, with a Shirley Temple whose portrayal of her your emotions will be the wonder of your life.

"Wee Willie Winkie" starts off colorfully exciting in the railroad station at Rajpore, India, where Shirley and her widowed mother, June Lang, have arrived to take up residence at a frontier army post, commanded by her grandfather, stern old Colonel Smith. Before their eyes, Khoda Khan, a fierce native chieftain is caught in a gun smuggling attempt and arrested. Losing from around his neck is the amulet a treasured amulet, which is picked up by Shirley.

Unhappy at the post under the gruff discipline of the colonel, Shirley decides to win his affection by becoming a soldier and Michael Whalen, a young lieutenant who has taken a fancy to her and to her mother, puts her under the care of the bully sergeant, Victor McLaglen. The latter dubs the little girl "Wee Willie" because of the gaunlt way she has of squinting under her eyes when she asks questions.

Shirley's attempts to impress her grandfather only land her in more trouble, but she wins the gratitude of the imprisoned Khoda Khan when he returns his amulet. The proud chieftain is freed in a surprise attack by the tribes on the border blazes in crimson warfare which costs McLaglen's life, among others.

Because she feels that both Khoda Khan and her grandfather have misjudged her, even if they could, Shirley takes a desperate step to end the bloodshed and sets out at night for the Khyber Pass, lookout of the tribesmen. When they discover her loss, the Highlanders set out grimly for Khyber Pass to rescue their child or die in the attempt. With the lives of those she loves in the balance, Shirley makes one last desperate gesture to save them and bring peace, in a climax-filled sequence which brings the picture to a thrilling climax.

Cesare Romero, Constance Collier and Young Douglas Scott have prominent roles in the film.

Kelnar used brown and white scarf which Miss Earhart lost several years ago at Roosevelt field as "proof" that he and other members of a fictitious crew of an equally fictitious Spanish gun-running boat had found Miss Earhart on a lonely isle. Yankees-Cubs Series This Fall Being Tooted by the Experts But Giants May Yet Pull String

New York Team Plays Best Ball in Closing Weeks

YANKS A CINCH

Ducky Wucky Medwick Continues to Pommel Herculean

By SID FEDER

All over the baseball map they're climbing aboard the bandwagon for a Yankee-Cubs world series this fall and the way things shape up now that's not a bad guess.

A lot of applecart can be upset in the two weeks still to go before they start commuting between New York and Chicago for their peanuts, hot dogs and homers, particularly in that National League race, but in the current pace of the Cubs and Yanks it's going to be tough to turn the trick.

Standout possibility to kick over the dope bucket are the Cincinnati Reds. For one thing, they always have that annoying habit of riding along within striking distance all the top until the final weeks, and then hitting the ears off everything in sight.

So it's not going to be any too much of a shock to see the Cubs at best, despite their current 5½-game lead, have to be knocked off Boston's Bees in both ends of a double-header yesterday 3-0 and 3-2 on a one-hit pitching performance by Tex Carleton in the opener and a ninth-inning comeback by Cincy's Reds in both games.

Cubs' Lead Seemed.

The twin win boosted the Cubs' lead by half a game, since the Giants could get no better than an even break with their favorite "stooges", the Phillies. They won the opener 10-2, but Jim Weaver's three-hitter blanked them 3-0 in the nightcap.

It's far easier to settle the American League business in advance. Nine and a half games in front, the Yankees look like a shoo-in from here. They squeezed through with a 6-5 win over Cleveland Indians yesterday for their eighth success in a row.

Boston Red Sox, in second place, stretched their undefeated run to 13 games by taking the White Sox 7-5 in their opener, but then had the string snapped with a 13-9 walloping in the nightcap.

Detroit Tigers belted two homers in the first game and the Cards took a 3-2 decision from the Phillies, but the best they could get was a 6-6 draw in the nightcap, despite Ducky Wucky's third round-tripper of the day. The Reds and Dodgers also went to a nightcap deadlock at 1-1, after the Reds won 6-4 in the early tain ealer.

The Bees topped the Senators 5-1 in a game cut to five frames by rain. The Athletics surprised with a double licking over St. Louis Browns, 8-4 and 7-3.

WINNIPEGS WIN CANOEING TITLE

Carterville, Que., Aug. 9 (CP)— The grand aggregate championship of the Canadian Canoe Association National Regatta moved west for the first time in history here while eastern paddling critics hailed a Montreal boy from the Winnipeg Canoe Club.

Over the current-filled waters of Carterville Boating Club's back river course Saturday, the Winnipeggers climaxed a 7-point struggle to win the Burgee, emblematic of the aggregate supremacy by sweeping four firsts and three seconds for 40 points, 11 more than second-place Toronto Balmy Beach.

Two records fell before the efforts of some 400 paddlers representing 20 clubs, but the time-smashing took back place to the showing of the Winnipeg team, comprising the Groff brothers, Percy and Bob, Lundy Lyall, Henry Dedson, Jack McDowell and Wilf Batty, All shared in the point making.

ORIOLES KNOCK OFF THE LEADERS

Wallop Toronto in Both Ends of a Double Bill

(By The Associated Press)

Baltimore Orioles are having a lot of fun. They won't catch Newark Bears, International League leaders, but right now they're getting almost as big a kick out of knocking off the teams that best them in their lean weeks of the current season.

The flock flew low in April and May. They dropped two to Buffalo Leafs yesterday, in both ends of a double-header, 5-3, and 6-5. Smoky Joe Martin smacking three homers in the nightcap, his third in the eighth, winning the ball game.

Bill Lohrman won his 15th victory for Baltimore in the first game as outfielder Ab Wright hit his 20th and 90th home runs.

Newark Bears had little trouble keeping well ahead of the pack. They trounced Rochester Red Wings, 8-4 and 4-1. Steve Sundra won his 14th victory in the opener with his mates getting seven runs in the first five innings.

Vito Tamulis' five hit pitching was good enough to subdue Wings in the second game.

Two top notch pitching performances gave Buffalo Bisons victories over Syracuse Chiefs, 5-0 and 1-0. Thrush Smith and Art Jorgens pitched the opener and hard luck Bill Harris changed his luck and beat Lloyd (Whitey) Moore of the Chiefs in the nightcap.

Hal Lee's single in the 19th inning gave Jersey City Giants an even break with Montreal Royals. The Giants won the second game on Lee's hit 1-0, after losing to Royals in the opener, 2-0.

MANUFACTURERS OUT OF PLAYOFFS

Drop Thrilling 11-10 Decision to Trent Cottons

Trenton, Aug. 9 (Special)—Fully extending the league lead, Trent Manufacturers softball club dropped a thrilling 11 to 10 decision to Trent Cottons elite on the diamond at Bayshore Park on Saturday evening. Fans filled the bleachers and lined the first and third base lines. The set-back put the Manufacturers out of further competition and eliminated them from the Mercantile league finals that starts the latter part of this week. Trent Cottons expect to retain the league laurels for the third time in history when they have to play a better brand of ball than they exhibited against the Manufacturers. Trent Cottons are Canada Cottons flipping duties and D. Angelo, Hall, Bell, Hall and Hall throughout the seven round contest. Trent Manufacturers are Manufacturers but 8 hits and the latter issued 11 safeties. Burtt kicked around in the seventh inning and issued 9 walks while his rival gave but 3 strolls. Burtt, the league leader struck out four batters to Anderson's five.

Home Runs Here

It was the Millmen's four home runs, that sent their opponents down to defeat. Trent circuit clouts came in the opening inning when Morin walloped one of Anderson's offerings for a four bagger with a team mate aboard. Bell, Hall and Hall registered a trio of ones, and third Cotton home run came from the Groff brothers and Charlie Drake ended the heavy slatting in the ninth canto by knocking the ball to straight left field. Anderson of the Stoney Lonesome-Hargaze semi-final series will meet the Trentons for the league championship. The Lonesome squad inflicted a 9 to 5 reverse upon one game crew on August 3rd., and their meeting this Tuesday evening will be a clash worthwhile witnessing.

YORK MAKES GOOD AS DETROIT CATCHER

Washington, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Rookie broad-shouldered Cherokee, pole-bing pitches for Detroit, has put a grin on Mickey Cochrane's face where they had been worry wrinkles over the Tigers' catching problems.

Rudy York has caught the last six games for Detroit, and looks like a permanent fixture.

York will do. I think," Manager Mickey said. "He has everything a catcher needs and he can hit."

A first baseman a year ago for Birmingham, York is six feet, one inch and weighs 210.

Rudy has made 17 home runs among 49 hits in 83 games.

CANNIFTON OUT AS LATTA WINS SECOND STRAIGHT

Leaders of League Bow to Third Place Squad in Playoffs

YOUNGE IS MASTER

Cannifton Will Continue in Playdowns of 'C' Series O.B.A.A.

Cannifton, Aug. 9 (Special)—Latta proved themselves the moneyed players that they really are, when on Saturday afternoon before a large crowd they took the second straight game from the league leading Cannifton "Kilties" to oust them from the playdowns. This marks the fifth straight time the Cannifton entrants have been forced out in the first round of the playoffs in the O. H. League.

Cannifton have affiliated with the O.B.A.A. in the Intermediate series and now will represent this district in the provincial playdowns that are soon to start. Although Cannifton were not fortunate enough to win their own league they have the league's best wishes in the forthcoming provincial series. It is regretable, that Cannifton hit a slump just as the schedule finished, for at their best this same team would prove tough opposition in any company.

Veteran at Peak

Latta's veteran ace ball artists, Youngs, was complete master of the situation here on Saturday afternoon and after the first inning, when a questionable discussion at the plate by Umpire Peacock, who cut off a threatened scoring apree by the ultimate losers, proved to be almost invincible as he retired inside in order in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth, and in three only frames had only four men to face him. Bob Simpson was Coach Barrett's choice for mound duty and while Bob held the opposition to but one more single than his team mates collected, his support was very ragged at times as his mates kicked in with five costly errors, three of which entered into the scoring. Simpson was nicked for ten hits while he struck out five and gave free transportation to an equal number. Youngs scattered nine safeties, struck out five and walked one.

Opened With Barrage

Cannifton opened with a barrage of base hits in the first but only scored one, as Jarrell singled and was advanced by Hughes' infield out. Simpson singled, Bleckman did likewise but Simpson was nabbed at third as he tried to score it. Simpson singled and E. Jarrell hit to Bleckman with Bleckman being called out at the plate for a close play. Latta went two ahead in their half as Lee hit to Jarrell for a hit batsman and three errors followed to shoot three runs home. No more scoring was in evidence in the fifth when Latta tallied four time on four hits, a free ride and an error. Again in the eighth the Cannifton batters shined with Jarrell on a hit batsman and a walk being followed by two successive pinch hits. Tie was the end of Latta's scoring but Cannifton tallied once in the dying moments as pinch hitter Bush singled and scored on E. Jarrell's double.

Latta pulled off a double killing in the fourth when Dewe beat E. Jarrell's fly to double Simpson off first. The whole Latta infield played sound ball backed by fine average remarkable support and simply toasted those hot grounders.

Line-ups:

Cannifton—L. Jarrell 3b; Hughes ss; Empson cf; Bleckman rf; Simpson p; E. Jarrell c; Barriage and Sanfield 2b; Sharp lf; Dewe 1b; Bush and Bush.

Latta—Crowe cf; Hall 3b; Marsh ss; Simpson 3b; Parks 1b; Orr c; Doherty lf; Fargey rf; and Youngs p.

Today marks the first of our guest columnists for the next few days. The column today is contributed by William Todd, President of the Belleville Softball Association.

Softball enthusiasts this year are being treated with some splendid examples of the popular summer pastime, as well as a great many upsets.

The softballers early in the Spring formed a softball association consisting of six teams, four teams playing in Class A, one in Class B intermediate series and one in Class C series.

This has been a good season which started on the ball diamond used for some years, on the lower end of Coleman Flats, while the new diamond on the western end of the flats was being prepared and on which the league leaders are now playing off for city honors as well as the honor of representing Belleville in the Ontario playdowns.

During 1936 the team representing The Percival Store went through a most hectic siege during the play-offs calling for two or three games. The local 1936 champs during the stages lost each first game, only to fight with their backs to the wall and win the other two games and the silver cup emblematic of Intermediate A series of Ontario.

Many new faces are to be seen on the various teams, which proves that many new players are being brought up from the juvenile ranks of our city in an endeavour to keep Belleville on the map of the softball world, and provide clean sport for all the various supporters and fans.

Some of the most outstanding upsets in the league are having the junior entry Aajmaa club the defeat the strong Corbin team and the work of Neil Sargents team which has been greatly strengthened, enabling them to enter the play-off, beat Point Anne on the local diamond, lose to the Sedore let boys at Point Anne field causing an extra game to decide winner to meet the winner of Corbin-Aajmaa contest for city honors.

The attendance at the games has been very good, the executive of the association desires to express their appreciation by providing good clean sport, both on and off the playing field. The association hopes to provide better accommodation in the near future for spectators and players.

GIBBARDS HOLD A SLIM CHANCE

Possibility They May Oust Petes For Playoff Spot

(By The Canadian Press)

Port Colborne Sailors, in fourth place at the end of the Niagara District Senior Baseball loop schedule, were out in front of St. Catharines today. The Sailors whipped the Saints, who finished in first place, 8-1 Saturday in the first game of the playdowns.

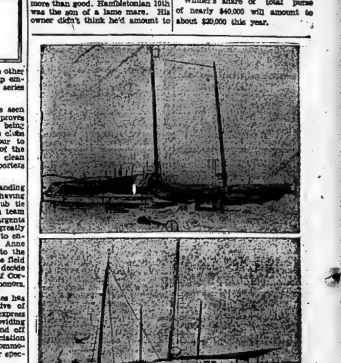
In the other Niagara semi-final Merrition Alliance failed to show form which brought them from the cellar to second position in a great late-season rush, and the paper town team lost to Falls Cataracts 4-0.

Other Senior Leagues were straightening away for the playoff stretch, too. In the intercountry Brantford was finally eliminated from hope of a playoff spot, when they took a 13-0 trouncing from London, leaving Hornets Saturday tied up the Brant belters.

Can Gain Tie

A win by Stratford over Strathroy Wednesday—last game of the season—would provide each of the Nationals in a first -place tie with London, in which case a sudden-death game will be played in Stratford Saturday. Second and third teams will play a best-in-three series to decide which meets the top club in the finals.

In the Central Ontario League Napanee Gibbards lost all but a mathematical chance of gaining a playoff berth when they lost to the third place Cobourg Cubs here. Joe Jakaflv allowed only three hits but Petes couldn't pull out a victory, and the last of the ninth when the winning run was scored on a league error. The score was 4-3.



The Central Ontario League ends its schedule Saturday providing two postponed games are run off this week. Oshawa Motors, provincial champions last year, still have a chance to catch Kingston Ponies for first place in the league. Second and third teams will play a best-ir-three series to decide the finalists.

HAMBLETONIAN STAKE RACED ON WEDNESDAY AT GOSHEN, NEW YORK

(By Paul Mickelson)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Goshen, N.Y., Aug. 9.—(AP)—The buggy whip Derby, officially known as the Hambletonian stakes, has its 11th running Wednesday—if it doesn't rain too much.

The big race, as important to trotters as the Kentucky Derby is to runners, is named in honor of

A thrilling rescue by members of the crew of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Roch saved the lives of six men as their ship was sinking in the frozen waters of Canada's north land. Locked in the grinding ice near Bernard Harbor, N.W.T., the Mounted police vessel is still fighting its way out of the dangerous ice, said sank shortly after the six members to be the worst in years.

Vince's Room

By JAY WORTHINGTON

Vince came in at four-thirty, whistling cheerily; walked into his den, took one look and came out roaring like a wounded bull.

"Oh-oh," sighed Lucille. "Here it comes."

"Lo, how many times must I tell you to let my room alone!" He burst into the kitchen, arms waving, dark eyes flashing. "Now I won't be able to find a thing for at least two weeks!"

"Don't exaggerate darling."

"I'm not exaggerating! I tell you I can't find anything after you get through cleaning and pushing things around. And what's more I'm not going to tell you about it again!"

"Well, I'm glad to hear that because I'm going to keep right on cleaning it. I won't have our home looking like a pig sty."

"Pig sty!" choked Vince. "Methinks what you think of your husband eh? His room is a pig sty. In other words, I'm a pig!"

"I didn't say you did, and please stop shouting at me, Vincent Osborn!"

"I'm not shouting at you! Now, you listen and get this straight. Either you stay out of my room or I get out and when I do I'll stay out!"

"Don't bother. I'll go. You won't have to. Mamma was right. You're just a big selfish overbearing bully. I'm going home."

He laughed shortly, "I've heard that before too. Well, get back so we can have supper by six."

Vince, a commercial artist, did most of his work at home. Consequently his room was always filled with unfinished work.

He heard her open the door to the coal closet, and he rushed into the hall. "Lo, you're not really going are you?"

She looked quickly.

"Not—not for good!"

"I—can't see any other way, Vince. We just can't seem to get along. We—we end—debate. Don't, Vince—stay away. Don't touch him!"

"Lo, I—I'll forgive you. If you'll let my room alone."

"Forgive me!" She jerked on her gloves. "Oh, Vince, you're impossible. Please let me pass with the boys to the coupe."

"Lucille! But I—"

"I'll have daddy drive it back tonight if you really want it. I'll call you when you know."

The front door closed and she was gone. He rushed to the window, saw her drive off and then went to curse himself bitterly for being such a fool.

Then he called on a policeman strolling idly below. Radio cars! He reached for the telephone and called police headquarters. "My car," he said, "license V-22-29 . . . yes, stolen from in front of my apartment, 96 Pine . . . Few minutes ago. Thanks."

He hung up, a little frightened; sat back and waited five, ten, fifteen minutes. The phone rang.

"Hello . . . Oh, it's you, darling. . . . At the police station? Why, well, that's too bad. Sit tight—I'll be right over."

Lucille was huddled in a wooden chair, looking frightened and ashamed. As if she really had done something wrong. He wanted so much to take her in his arms and comfort her, but first he had to straighten things out.

"Stupid of me," he told the officer in charge. "Never thought my wife might have taken it—though she was out somewhere else."

Lucille gasped. "You thought I was—"

"Yes, but it's all right now," he interrupted hastily. He took her arm "Sorry to have been such a nuisance."

"Hey, wait a minute there! Whatre you talkin' about, Mr. Osborn? This—this lady, your wife, was arrested for passing a red light at sixty-three miles an hour and on the wrong side of the road! That'll be thirty dollars, and if we ever catch her pulling a stunt like that again, we'll take away her license!"

Vince drove back with a puzzled frown on his face.

"You acted as if you thought you knew why I was arrested," said Lucille, looking at him oddly. "I believe you told them it served me right. Why did you do that?"

He looked straight ahead. "You know, there are only two reasons I can think of," he said, "why a woman would drive past a red light at sixty-three miles an hour on the wrong side of the road. One is that she was crazy. Two—" he paused, the ghost of a grin hovering on his lips. "That she wanted to be mighty sure of being arrested! Why did you want to be arrested, honey?"

She snuggled a little closer. "When the cop first saw me I was doing sixty-eight," said softly.

They stopped for a red light.

"Do you know," mused Lucille, "I've been thinking about that room. I wondered if perhaps you might like to clean it yourself once in a while. Whenever you felt like it you know."

"Say I could do that, couldn't I?" He turned now and looked squarely into her blue eyes, strangely bright. "And you could come in and look over the job, sort of. I want to see that it was all right, couldn't you ?"

She smiled happily up at him. He took his arm from the wheel.

A whistle shrilled. "Hey, green light! Move on there. You two. D'ya wanna get pinched in soldering up traffic?"

FIELD DAY AT ELDORADO IS FINE SUCCESS

Event Sponsored by Softball Team And Women's Institute

Eldorado.—On Monday, August 2nd, the Eldorado softball team and the Eldorado and Bannockburn W. I. combined to sponsor one of the most successful field days held in this district for some time.

Commencing about ten-thirty in the morning with a softball game between the girls of Cooper and the girls of Eldorado with the former coming out on the top of a 21 to 14 score, the day was full of ball games, races and sports for the little ones. Dinner was then served on the grounds.

At one-thirty in the afternoon, Bannockburn and Malone hooked up in the first softball tilt which proved to be rather one-sided. Davies of Malone proved to be no mystery to the sluggers of the north, a barrage of base hits including six home runs in the ninth innings found Malone on the short end of a 34 to 7 score, Jim Hunter, Bannockburn speed ball artist, keeping 8 hits well scattered. G. Stewart was the big hitter, collecting 3 homers and several singles. The final score was 34 to 7 in favour of the Northerners.

Batteries: Bannockburn—Hunter and Shaw; Malone—Davies and Smith.

Umpires: Cawley, Malone, at the plate; Hoines, Eldorado, on the base.

At 3 o'clock the Eldorado softballers met Bannockburn for the championship of the day, Eldorado having drawn a bye on the day's draw. This game proved to be a bye on the day's draw. This game proved to be a thriller with Jim Hunter of Bannockburn and Ken Holmes of the homesters hooking up in a pretty pitcher's battle with Holmes having the best of the dual leading 9-3 until the 9th when a couple of walks and several base hits started Bannockburn on a hitting splurge that netted them 6 runs, tying the score. Wartman was brushed to the mound but the damage was done; he was met with such a solid array of base hits that when the smoke of battle had cleared away, Bannockburn was on top 10 to 4. Hunter was a crowd pleaser.

Batteries for the game: Bannockburn—Hunter and Shaw; Eldorado—Holmes and Hagerman.

Umpires: Cawley, Malone, at the plate; Tuite, Eldorado, on the base.

Batteries: Cooper—Wartman and Hollins; All Stars—Hunter, Stewart and Shaw.

Umpires: Plain, Parnell, Eldorado; bases, Hollins, Cooper.

Little Benny's Note Book

The new family in the next block moved—all 4 ways in without anybody finding out if the new kid is any shorter than Shorty Biggs and Saliday afternoon us fellows was standing around the letter box and Sid Hunt said, Hay how about that new guy in the block, is he or aint he?

Meaning shorter than Shorty or not, and I said, Let's go down there and sit them to measure, what's you say, Shorty?

So we walked, bed me to him. Shorty's actually glad well of all things his mother said and us fellows said, Sure, what did you expect, that was the idea, what did you think?

TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Tarzan's determination, even eagerness, to venture into the land of the Kali did not blind him to the hazards of his journey. He moved warily. But could his caution preserve him from Mafka's unaccountable powers, which struck unseen and without warning? . . .

. . . Meanwhile, in the castle which was the heart of the Kali Kingdom, Stanley Wood fell more and more under the enchantment of the cruel, beautiful queen. . . . Finally he could contain himself no longer. Ignoring the risks of his recklessness, he declared his love.

For a long time she gazed at him impassively. Then she spoke, in a small low voice.

"Love! So that's what it is." In that moment she was a woman, like any other, listening to the melody of love. But quickly she became again the Queen of the awful Kali.

AS WORKERS ENTER

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 10 (CP)—More than 150 screaming girl strikers charged at police today and started a riot at the Bonner Worth plant here of Dominion Woollens and Textiles, Limited. Nine strikers, three of them girls, and a Union organizer were arrested.

Police threw a tear gas bomb, shoved the girls to one side, fought and clubbed men strikers who joined in the fray and were successful in clearing a passage for about 60 employees to enter the plant which had been closed by a strike of 750 workers seven weeks ago.

Police arrested three girls and four men during the disturbance and locked eight others in cells for custody. They were remanded by Magistrate W. A. P. Campbell, Port Hope, for one week.

Woman Hits Mayor

One woman hit Mayor George A. MacDonald with her fist and other strikers showed the Mayor back when he tried to get through the picket line. He tried unsuccessfully to tell them of Premier Hepburn's suggestion that a vote be taken with his promise he would "look after them."

Chief of Police Samuel Newhall was hit on the head by a brick thrown by a striker. A Provincial police officer broke his billy when he clubbed the alleged assailant, Jack Coughlin, over the head and knocking him unconscious.

Three girls and three men strikers were arrested for arraignment before Magistrate C. A. Langley on charges of inciting a riot and assault. They are: Beatrice Hamilton, Dorothy Walwork, Edith Prindle, of the strike committee, James Pennington, Gordon Dundas and Lon Coughlin. Later three other men were arrested on unnamed charges.

Nephew of Doctor Drowns at Lucerne

Dr. J. J. Robertson rushed to Lucerne, Quebec, on Sunday following receipt of the news that his nephew, seven year old Richard Robertson, son of Mr. Angus Robertson had fallen off a pier and drowned that afternoon.

Straying away from his nurse, the youngster wandered to the pier and fell into the water. Frantic search of the grounds following the failure of the boy to appear revealed nothing. His body was found in the water some time later.

Dr. Robertson returned to the city today.

Europe More Peaceful Says Former Premier

Toronto, Aug. 10 (CP)—Hon. Howard Ferguson, former Premier of Ontario, returned to his home here with a picture of a more or less peaceful Europe. After his tour overseas he said Mussolini, the unpredictable and "megalomaniac" figure, was the only ominous element.

"Britain's rearmament program is a check to dictators of Europe," he said. "They regarded her as a sort of old lady who would submit to any indignities. They do not know he cannot compete with Britain once she starts. He learned a big lesson."

Finsler's Comet Near Dipper; Two Nights Only to See Visitor

Tuesday And Wednesday Last Chance to Witness Sight

DIRECTIONS GIVEN

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
(Associated Press Science Writer)

New York, Aug. 10 (AP)—Tonight and tomorrow night the whole world has grandstand seats for seeing the eternal mystery of the stars—but only the only nights when there is a good chance for the layman to see this celestial object.

The comet discovered by the Swiss astronomer Finsler a month ago, is now at its brightest, but even so is unlikely to be seen unless the watcher knows the exact spot.

Of these two nights it is passing along the only constellation which every person in the world knows—the big dipper. It is just above the dipper, passing toward the handle. About seven days the side which would be the top if the dipper were full of water.

Look at the star which joins the handle to the bowl of the dipper. The comet tonight, according to the diagrams in Popular Astronomy, is right above this star. It is exactly the same distance from the handle joint star as the space from this star to the star which joins the bowl to the bottom of the dipper. It is in a direct straight line connecting to sight, made by these two stars.

Tomorrow night will be even easier to fix the comet's position. Look for the outermost star in the dipper's handle. Count one space and then one the handle. This is the star, Mizar, very distinct, where the handle bends. The comet, counting the outermost handle star as one.

The comet was brightest last night. But it probably can be seen better tonight and tomorrow. After that it will fade rapidly.

TIMES TO STAND NO 'DICTATION' OF NAZI REGIME

German Government Must Have 'Attack of Sense in Few Days'

LEAVE POST VACANT

British People Guessing at Reason For Expulsion

London, Aug. 10 (AP)—The Times announced today there "could be no question" of accepting the "dictation" of the German Government by replacing its expelled Berlin correspondent with one "more amenable."

"The German Government yesterday ordered Norman Ebbutt, widely-quoted Berlin correspondent of The Times for many years, to leave Germany within two weeks in retaliation for the expulsion of three German correspondents from Great Britain.

The Times was informed by the British Foreign Office that the expulsion order followed a brief correspondent in Berlin to be a "persona non grata" to the Nazi regime to work considered here as trivialities and more attention to what is wanted."

No 'Dictation'

An official of The Times commented:

"We are not going to send a man to Berlin at dictation of the Nazis. Unless the Germans suffer an attack of sense within the next few days and keep Ebbutt we shall leave the Berlin office vacant.

"The case is very understandable. The German with the case of their own reconsidered by British—which it won't be."

Editorially, The Times said today: "If they (the German Government) should really decide to take such a step there could be no question, of course, of replacing Mr. Ebbutt by a more amenable correspondent."

A Setback

"It would merely confirm their their opinion that the world at this and other countries who consider Nazi handiwork do not accept with unusual courtesies of civilized international life and would be a serious setback to those working for the improvement of Anglo-German relations."

An authoritative source indicated the retaliatory German action and a German protest to the British Government would not alter the refusal of the Home office to give new the labor permits of the three German correspondents. Two of them have already left England.

Cause of Expulsions

Werner Von Crome, correspondent of the Nazi establishment and the remaining member of the trio said he expected to leave London next week-end.

"The matter is in the hands of my Government," he said. "I am not making any approach to the Foreign Office.

The British Government offered no explanation of the refusal to renew labor permits necessary to Have You Ever Saved a Life?

PLEA FOR SAFE DRIVING

Years of training and years of experience lie behind the deft strokes of the great surgeon's knife as he performs a delicate operation. Life and death are in the balance. Loved ones tremble in suspense and emotion. Finally, after anxious hours—success! The supreme ability of one man in a lifetime has saved another life.

Most of us can never save a life that way. The surgeon's skill is ours. But by preventing accidents on streets and highways, every one of us, whether we are drivers or pedestrians, can just as surely save lives and safeguard our fellow men against crippling or fatal injuries.

We can teach our children the enduring principles of safe driving and safe walking—of safe living.

We can correct the unsafe practices of our own driving and walking. We can uphold the authority of our public officials in impartial and effective law enforcement. We can help to organized efforts to spread the gospel of traffic safety to everybody. And, most of all, we can resolve in our own minds to perform no act dangerous to others or ourselves.

Great skill and long training are not needed for this kind of life saving. What we do need—all of us—is a new realization that I AM my brother's keeper." Will you accept your personal share of this great responsibility? Will you help to stem the tide of blood and tears that pounds its sweep Ontario's streets and highways? Will you SAVE A LIFE?

Band Plays Timely Airs On Moonlight Steamer As Rudder Chain Breaks

Lindsay, Ont., Aug. 10 (CP)—Two while temporary repairs were made hundred passengers, enjoying a moonlight excursion on the steamer Sidney Lake, received a brief but sight when in crossing Sturgeon Lake enroute to Pontypool, the rudder chain broke, releasing the steamer from control.

The momentum of the ship carried it into heavy weed beds where it lashed and churned about an hour to the ship's rudder control.

The Lindsay Boys' Band played numerous lively airs during the interval to revive the spirits of the passengers nervously awaiting the excursion was sponsored by the band.

The boat wended its way up the Scugog River to Lindsay at 2 a.m. to the strains of "We won't be home until morning".

French Canadians Faithful To 'Canada First' Policy

Wish to Retain British Connection in Quebec

OPPOSE ANNEXATION

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 10 (CP)—French Canadian Leon Mercier Gouin of Montreal told the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics today, "are well determined to remain faithful to our policy of Canada First".

The Montreal lawyer, son of the late Sir Lomer Gouin, long-time Liberal Premier of Quebec, traced the growth of Canada from the French-English wars and outlined the views of present-day French Canadians.

Retain British Connection.

"Like the immense majority of French Canadians," said Mr. Gouin, "I am in favor of retaining the British connection. But, with the immense majority of my people, I am opposed to any new measure which would diminish our powers of self-government.

"Schemes for imperial federation seem to us a question already settled 'negatively'. To the best of my knowledge, the immense majority of Canadians of all origins are, just as well as we are, opposed to imperialism in the narrow sense of the word. We are well determined to keep our home rule. We want to grow as a free nation within the British commonwealth of Nations . . . French Canadians are well determined to remain faithful to our policy of 'Canada First'. May all Canadians realize that patriotism has no other meaning for us."

Kinds of Patriotism.

It was not to be inferred, said Mr. Gouin, that all French Canadians were unanimous in their patriotism. Many were of English-speaking peoples. Canada, in his opinion, offered "an extraordinary rich variety of modes of patriotism."

For instance, "French Canadians are absolutely opposed to any form of annexation by the United States. I have to add that French Canadians are also the opponents of any scheme of imperial federation."

Mr. Gouin, who personally favored, "in principle," the perpetual neutrality of Canada.

POLICE SEEK IDENTITY OF MAN HIT BY TRAIN

Hamilton, Aug. 10—(CP)—Police today sought to identify an unknown man, believed to be a transient, who was found unconscious on the railway tracks near Bayview and who died in hospital today.

The man was struck near the tracks after a London train had passed and it is thought that he either fell from the train or was struck. He did not regain consciousness on removal to hospital.

He appeared to be between 35 and 40 years of age, about five feet nine inches in height, and weighed about 190 pounds. A safety razor, soap and paper towels and $15 were found in the pockets of his suit, worn by a Toronto firm.

Inquest will be held Friday.

Deluge of Rain Falls in Stirling

Lowlifying scudding clouds cinister in their blackness unloosed a deluge in the district and north of the city shortly before noon today. In the village of Stirling sheets of rain of exceptional proportions poured down in the streets. Water swirled down the gutters and automobiles were forced to wait for a let-up before being able to proceed on their way. Pulling straight from the clouds the pelting rain lashed the streets with such force that visibility was at a minimum and pedestrians and motorists were forced to remain where they were until the storm subsided.

WAGE INQUIRY IN TEXTILE INDUSTRY TO BE INSTITUTED

May Set Minimum Wages For Industry After Investigation

USE LEGISLATION

Wages Set to be Retroactive to Date Men Return to Work

Toronto, Aug. 10 (CP)—Ontario's Labor and Industries Board was faced today with the first big task—an inquiry into wages paid in the textile industry in the province. Under legislation passed at the last session of the legislature, the Board may set up minimum wages for men in any industry.

Premier Mitchell Hepburn last night announced he had ordered the inquiry with settlement of two knotty textile strikes as its immediate objective—those in the Peterborough plants of Dominion Woolens and Textiles Limited and in Dominion plants of Canadian Cottons Limited.

In the first step towards settlement, every effort will be made to get the strikers back to work, with the assurance, Premier said, that any wage adjustments ordered by the Board will be effective as of the date the men return to work.

Cover Every Plant

Premier Hepburn said, however, that the investigation would go beyond the Peterborough and the Cornwall companies into every textile plant in Ontario. Included would be the Lake Simcoe Cotton other mills.

The Board, headed by E. J. Young, formerly of Weyburn, Sask., was also aided by the determination of "fair" wages in the textile industry by experts from the Ontario Treasury Department, Controller G. Walters, controller of finances, conferred with Premier Hepburn and J. P. Marsh, Deputy Minister of Labor before announcement of the inquiry last night.

R. G. Tolmie of Canadian Cottons, Limited, requested the investigation. On behalf of his company, he declined to make retroactive any order that might be made in the case, but pledged that the Cornwall employees would return work. Premier Hepburn accepted Mr. Tolmie's offer. A similar undertaking would be necessary on the part of Dominion Woollens.

The mayors of both cities and chairmen of the strikers' committees were asked to cooperate in urging the strikers to return to their jobs and Premier Hepburn said he hoped "the difficulties of the past weeks" could be cleared up. "There is no economic waste that has been caused."

The Peterborough strike was called originally in the Auburn plant with some 200 workers walking out the last June 25. It followed a week later by a similar number of workers in the Bonnerworth unit: Their demands are similar to those of the Cornwall strikers.

Tweedsmuir Journey in North Like Old Canadian Romances

British Press Enthused Over Possibilities of Arctic Area

VICEROY'S EXPERIENCE

By GUY E. SNOADES

Edmonton, Aug. 10 (CP) — Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General here late yesterday from Fort Smith, capital of the Northwest Territories, is providing considerable interest in the north country throughout occasional lengthy feature articles in the newspapers on the development of Canada's hinterlands.

The Daily Telegraph, in an editorial page feature by Kenneth Coupland, reviewed today the increased activity in the exploration of the barren mineral wealth and the changes brought by air transportation. He forecast the finding of not only gold but great new mineral territory.

In an accompanying editorial, the Telegraph added: "There is immense scope for wealth to be developed in Arctic river offers transport possibilities making it another St. Lawrence and the northern limit of wheat cultivation if steadily advancing. In undertaking an extended tour of the territories, Lord Tweedsmuir is shown to share the Canadian delight in opening the Arctic ode day as a parallel to the remarkable chapter Canadian history began in the opening of the prairies."

In associations with Lawrence of Arabia, during disturbances in Egypt at Port Smith His Excellency mentioned the name of Lawrence's brother, aged in a motorcycle accident. Harding said he had been Lawrence's pilot during the war.

British Interest in Journey.

London, Aug. 10 (CP)—Lord Tweedsmuir's trip to the Northwest Territories is provoking considerable interest in the press here. Overnight out occasional lengthy feature articles in the newspapers on the development of Canada's hinterlands.

Adopt Army as Career And Qualify for Pension After 21 Years' Service

New Experiment to be Made by War Minister Hore-Belisha

EXTEND COLOR SERVICE

Reservists to be Allowed To Join Other Forces

By I. NORMAN SMITH

London, Aug. 10 (CP)—The government announced today it had decided to strengthen the British army by making it more attractive for the working man.

Changes announced by War Minister Leslie Hore-Belisha under his system of army service to enable men in the ranks or on reserve to adopt the army as a career and qualify for pension after 21 years' service.

Soldiers about to complete their first term with the colors will be allowed to extend their service in sections A and B of the reservists will be allowed to rejoin the colors. Both classes of men on completion of twelve years' service will be eligible to re-engage to complete twenty-one years and thereby qualify for pension.

Present Practice.

The practice now is to enlist for seven years with the colors and five on reserve. It is only in exceptional circumstances that a private soldier is allowed to extend his color service to qualify for pension. A few eminent reservists are allowed to rejoin the colors only in few exceptional cases.

The experiment is expected to have its plain advantages: the first to show the extent to which soldiers are desirous of availing themselves of the opportunity of adopting the army as a career; the second to increase the number of soldiers serving with the colors.

Extension of Color Service.

Serving soldiers accepting the offer will extend their color service on the usual terms, namely, to re-join at the rate of pay and the rank in force at the time of their engagement to the army reserve. Married soldiers' allowance will be paid the married allowance and will be given a higher place on the married quarters roll but will not have any claim for priority over existing applications for vacancies.

Rejoining reservists also will receive on their discharge from the colors at the end of 21 years' service the same privileges of continuing service after 21 years as other soldiers.

Experiment For Short Period.

The scheme will be operated experimentally for a limited period of time.

START PROBE TEXTILE WAGES

Inquiry Will be Conducted With Agreement of Companies

CONTINUE STRIKE

Toronto, Aug. 10.—(CP)—The Ontario Industry and Labor board will start immediately its investigation of wages in the textile industry with the object of fixing a minimum wage. The Boards' inquiry will be conducted with the agreement and co-operation of both Canadian Cottons Ltd., and Dominion Woollens Ltd., Premier Mitchell Hepburn announced.

Representatives of both companies have agreed that when the Board's hearings on minimum wage schedules they will be made retroactive to the time striking employees of the two mills in Cornwall and Peterborough return to work. The Premier expressed the hope that as soon as word of this arrangement reached the strikers they would agree to return to their jobs pending the findings of the Industry and Labor Board.

Order Retroactive

The Canadian Cottons Company agreed last night after Mr. Hepburn had suggested it, and inquiry any order of the Board should be made retroactive and today at a meeting with the Premier, H. Barrett of the Dominion Woollens Ltd., also agreed to the suggestion.

Expressing regret at today's occurrences in Peterborough the Premier declared that if it was found necessary the present force of twenty provincial constables there would be augmented.

Some Disfavor Expressed

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 10.—(CP) Premier Hepburn's suggestion to have the probe start at once into the wage schedules at textile plants, met with some disfavor here today from strikers of the Canadian Cottons, Limited.

No statements were made from strike headquarters but a meeting will be held tomorrow to discuss the plan. Meanwhile, it was intimated unofficially the men were unlikely to return to work pending the inquiry.

AIR LINER DOWN, 3 PERSONS KILLED

Daytona Beach Scene of Fatality Just After Take-off

Daytona Beach, Fla., Aug. 10.—(AP)—A 14-passenger Eastern Air Lines transport, bound from Chicago for Miami, crashed just after a take-off here today, killing three persons and injuring six others.

The plane, carrying a crew of three and six passengers, had taken the air after a scheduled stop here. It struck a power pole, flattened a wooden fence, caught a tuft of small trees, and struck the earth. It was the line's first fatal accident.

Dead are Captain Robert Clair of Baltimore, Chief Pilot; Robert Reed, Co-Pilot, and a passenger whose identity was not established immediately.

The ship struck the earth with such force that its two motors were torn from the plane.

At the impact the motors blazed momentarily but the flames died down and the wings and fuselage did not burn.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Wind at will! In these days of yacht racing wind is very important. It is also important to the Caribs who practice the ancient art of making the wind blow but of stopping it also. They whistle and wave their hands and a rain cloud to drive it away to be used elsewhere. To a quiet storm, they chew the cassava root and spit it into the air and so pacify the spirit, Zemeen, who may be hungry. Zemeen dwells in underwhile wind they strike the stem of their canoes with an arrow. The custom of whistling to raise a wind is very widespread. Such childish beliefs and practices if illogical, are interesting.

THE WEATHER

TORONTO, Aug. 10 (CP)—Pressure is high over the western provinces and on the Atlantic seaboard but a shallow and unusually extensive trough of low pressure southward from Labrador south another extending from the Great Lakes westward across Ontario. Thunderstorms have occurred in Southern Ontario and Saskatchewan eastward to New Brunswick.

Lake Superior—Moderate easterly to northerly winds; fair today tonight and Wednesday with local thunderstorms and cooler.

Northern Ontario—Fair today and on Wednesday; not much change in temperature.

Southern Ontario and Alberta — Mostly fair today and Wednesday becoming a little warmer.

RAIN WASHES SOIL OFF 'SPUDS'

Rain Storm Plays Antics in Thurlow And Sidney

Old Jupiter Pluvius was in a playful mood yesterday. Moisture-laden clouds sent down miniature deluges of rain in intermittent spells of the district, filling ly long felt want in some parts and causing slight damage in others. Sheets of rain fell steadily for an hour over a strip approximately five miles in width in the fourth and fifth concessions of Sidney Township. A farmer residing five miles north of Foxboro stated this morning that potatoes growing on a side hill were washed nearly out of the ground. The tubers were plainly visible in the ground following the heavy downpour.

Other parts of the county report similar intermittent downpours, the majority of farmers state that the rain will benefit tomatoes and late vow crops to a great extent.

TRANSPORTATION PROGRESS SHOWN

Guest Speaker And Sound Pictures Tell Story to Rotary

Meeting of Belleville Rotarians Monday night have been likened to Old Home Week for a local one large sized re-union. First of interest was the program in Radio Quartette, four vocalists who made musical and pleasing debut all over the province a few years ago. They were not only present but they sang some of their rollicking songs which made such hits when the Radio Four was the talk of musical attraction of this locality and many other localities. In person they are Ross Morman, J. Arnold Thomson, Al Sullivan and Jim Hallow. Latter is now located in New York City and Al Sullivan in Ottawa. Leo Riggs, accompanist, filled the same role Monday. Past President Tom Meteer, of the city, was chairman. Other guests present were Frederick Ashley, Rotary Club secretary and Art Knowles, Montreal; Ed Miller, Stratford; T. Hently, Belleville.

President Meteer called the chair, assisted by Mack Haig, Secretary-Treasurer, when Leo Riggs directed the singing, and John Sexsmith played the piano.

Sound pictures of the progress of transportation from the wooden wheel days to the last automobile of today formed one feature of the meeting with Mr. W. Turney guest speaker. Mr. Turney is a very pleasant chap with a rich southern drawl—one of those Cobb, and Mr. Turney's home state of Alabama. He is assistant manager for Canada of the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation of Canada, and his subject illustrated by sound pictures was "The Long Road", depicting the efforts of research engineers to produce more power and speed in the automobile and this form of transportation more comfortable and safer. How the automobile has improved, step by step, after years of intense study and research was depicted in the word and picture and proved a most fascinating subject. The improvement of gasoline was depicted in detail with the discovery of Ethyl gasoline, which now makes the gasoline to produce certain desired results.

Introduced to the Rotarians by Fred Deacon, appreciation was expressed by Past President Bert Boyce and President Fred Douglas.

OLD CEMETERY IS CLEANED UP

Old St. James Burial Grounds Will Take on New Appearance

One of Belleville's famous old landmarks, the old St. James cemetery on Sidney Street, is now being cleaned up by the Holy Name Society of the Catholic parish. A number of men are now busily burning the dead grass, cutting brush and removing other blemishes which has given this sacred spot a rather unsightly appearance.

Old headstones which have fallen or been knocked over by the elements will be righted and a general position in the form of a pyramid, according to present intentions. Also a picket fence will be erected and when completed within a short time this fine old spot therein lie the remains of many prominent Belleville residents of former days will again take on an appearance befitting the resting place of those whom have go one before.

BELL CELEBRATES 61st ANNIVERSARY

August 10, 1876, Memorable Date in Telephone History

The familiar Blue Bell ensign, emblem of telephone service wherever the latter is found, today called the flagstaff of the telephone building here in commemoration of the successful demonstration by Alexander Graham Bell that the human voice could be transmitted over a distance of several miles.

It was on August 10th, 1876, that the double of the human ear, that filled the old Dominion Telegraph Office at Brantford to witness the demonstration, turned to cheers as many of them were permitted to listen to the audible words of speakers at Brantford twenty miles away.

It was long distance telephone service born.

Gradual improvements and developments eventually made possible two-way telephone conversations and the voice-reach was extended to a few hundred miles. Then development of the cable called the loading coil in 1911 more than doubled the reach of wire service communication but the never-satisfied telephone engineers and scientists continued at their task seeking improvement.

Bell's prophecy, made years before that "A man one part of the country may some day communicate by word of mouth with another in distant part" was realized in 1915 with the formal opening of transcontinental telephone repeater. The repeater, a device which regenerates voice impulses that have become weakened by travel over long distance, spaced throughout the continent at strategic points, make possible nation-wide speech by telephone.

Modern facilities of radio-telephony are now being developed in this country within potential reach of some 35,000,000 other telephones in 70 countries.

HUMIDITY INCREASES AS RAIN FALLS

Surcease from the humidity, which has encompassed the city for the past two days was afforded residents this morning, when a heavy fall of rain deluged the district for a period of fifteen minutes bringing relief to office and factory workers alike.

The rain which pounded down steadily thrashed the water of the Moira River causing tiny geysers to spout out of the highly placid surface of the water. City lawns and gardens thirsting for water for the past few days drank in the rain and no doubt will derive a great deal of benefit from the life-giving liquid.

JOHN GIBSON, 70, DIES IN HOSPITAL

Suddenly Stricken With Seizure at Place of Residence

Suffering with a heart seizure, John Gibson, 70, living on Church Street, was removed to Belleville General Hospital last night where he failed to recover and succumbed at an early hour this morning.

Gibson, who had been ill for some time, was found in a small building in the rear of a large ice house on Church Street, and had, according to police reports refused to accept aid from his neighbors, being found in a dazed condition. City Board of Health authorities sent Dr. R. A. Flynn to Gibson's place of residence but refused admittance by the sick man, Dr. Flynn notified the aid of the city police. Detective Fred Isard and Martin's ambulance rushed to the building and removed the man to the hospital. He did not respond to treatment.

Search of Gibson's effects by police officers resulted in the discovery of a bank book containing a credit balance of over seven hundred dollars.

Gibson was well-known by many residents.

As far as can be ascertained, Gibson has no relatives living in this district. Police intimate, however that anyone knowing of any living relatives of the deceased to get in touch with them immediately. The remains will lie in the Martin Funeral Home until funeral arrangements are made.

Red tomatoes fresh from the fields of the district descended on Belleville in large quantities today, being another fine display of farm and dairy produce. Bushels of six and seven quart baskets with six and eleven quart baskets were well filled and sold at 75 and 80 cents respectively.

Potatoes were fairly plentiful with no noticeable change in price, bushels being quoted seventy-five and eighty cents and potatoes at twenty five cents.

Sweet corn was available but in smaller quantities than the week-end with ebe yellow variety selling at fifteen cents per dozen ears. The usual supply of beets, carrots lettuce cabbage and cauliflower was on hand selling prices.

C. I. O. ORGANIZER

Alex Welch, organizer here for the Committee for Industrial Organization, was arrested on a charge of obstruction. "Welch is in the cells now pulling as he can be heard out in the street," said police four hours after the riot. "He is pulling a real British fair play."

Charles Cooke, here last night to confer with strike leaders when they declined the offer of the company to return to work pending negotiations with representatives of the textile industry, was also arrested.

The accused in court.

Rotted Eggs Hurled.

Rotten eggs and tomatoes were thrown at the police and the group of employes returning to work. Two police had formed the employees into a wedge-shaped formation, to break through the picket lines.

"The police were leading the workers through the picket lines when the girls on duty there, excited by their own yelling, jeered at them. Women joined in, striking at police with their flats," an eye-witness said.

Year Can Bandy Threats.

"The officers thrust the girls to one side, threw a tear bomb at them to clear the way, and clubbed the men with batons. No girl was struck, but they clawed at the police, pulled at their uniforms, and tried to scratch at them."

Practically all girls employed at the plant are under the age of 21 and more than half are in their teens.

Welch was arrested when he assertedly refused to obey the police lines to allow the police and workers into the plant.

More Workers Enter Plant.

After the riot had subsided additional workers entered the plant in two plants. The Auburn plant had been closed to the employees in departments. B. T. Mellon, manager said at noon 81 girls and 53 men had returned to the Bonner Worth plant.

"We have a balanced staff at No. 1 unit of the Bonner Worth plant and will be able to operate it," said Mellon. "No. 2 mill at Bonner Worth will not operate as yet."

Chief Newtail led a squad of 16 municipal police, three being on special constables, and a group of 12 Provincial police to the plant about 60 workers in a small wedge-shaped group, four police took the lead and others marched on the flanks of the wedge as the group broke through about 200 picketers at the main entrance to the plant.

Pickers Strike Police

Pickers struck police with their fists, a couple threw rotten eggs, and the police retaliated with their billies. Three of the workers were escorted into the plant were hurt.

Women and girls joined the ares in strident cat-calls at the group of workers who were assembling a short distance away when the plant closed by a strike seven weeks ago today.

"They were there when the men went in, the first started," an eye-witness said.

There was no disturbance after the Auburn plant at the company. About 83 employees returned there to work.

Discontent regarding the amount of wages paid and the working hours on strike seven weeks ago and none of these were among the groups which returned to work today. Workers who entered the plants were promptly laid-off.

The company will be unable to start operations with the men who returned today, it was believed. These were employed mostly in the knitting departments and operations could not be carried on unless the weavers also returned.

MUSSOLINI TESTS SICILIAN FORTS

Visit May be Turned Into Triumphal Tour by Populace

Rome, Aug. 10 (AP)—Premier Mussolini, acting as his own minister of war, took charge today—of preparations for large-scale war games to test the strength of the strategic Sicilian fortifications to protect Italy against invasion from the Mediterranean.

The Premier was given a tumultuous welcome when he arrived at Messina. The island city was decked with flags and bunting and Fascists predicted Il Duce's visit would be turned into a triumphal tour of the island when, like like a football at the toe of the Italian "boot."

Mussolini sailed yesterday from Gaeta on the yacht Aurora, escorted by 11 warships.

50,000 In Games

For the Premier it was a return to the scene of one of his most dramatic triumphs—the liberation of Sicily from the grip of the Mafia 15 years ago. But the prime business at hand was the "shadow boxing" manoeuvres of more than 50,000 picked soldiers, sailors and airmen.

The mock warfare in Western Sicily is scheduled to start Friday when a "blue" army of three divisions, supplemented by forces of home defence and coast defense militia, will try to destroy or rout a "red" army of two divisions which will attempt to land under the big guns of a convoying fleet.

Military observers said the manoeuvres are expected to demonstrate how modern Italian defences could protect Western Sicily from overseas invasion.

24 DAYS IN BUSH EMACIATES MAN

Sight Nearly Gone And Body Weakened by Starvation

Sundridge, Ont., Aug. 10.—(CP)—Only an unusually strong constitution has enabled Paul Crouch, 50-year-old woodworker, to survive 24 days in the bush, according to Dr. L. Gallagher, Pound Saturday after wandering in the woods since July 14, the emaciated man remained under watchful eyes today. Sundridge is five miles south of North Bay."

His sight almost gone, and weakened by a starvation diet of leaves and bark, Crouch was travelling cockgedly through the bush when James Parks found him. It is estimated Crouch lost 45 pounds in the period of nearly four weeks, that he stuggled to survive.

Woodsmen said they could not understand why Crouch had failed to strike the highway at one point or another in his wanderings. There are also several farms in the neighborhood, and automobile roads completely surround the area.

Nobody searched for the missing man who came here from Toronto has spring, but it was thought he had left his pulpwood camp job to return to the city.

He said he ate bark and leaves and sucked muddy water from depressions in the spongy ground. He smoked dried leaves in his pipe until his lighter ran out of fuel. Crouch cannot remember the last few days of his ordeal, but said his sight began to fail soon after he went blindly into trees and stumbled over boulders.

CHINESE WIPE OUT DETACHMENT

Defending Great Wall Pass Near Nankow at Time

Peiping, Aug. 10.—(AP)—Chinese sources reported today a Japanese army detachment had been wiped out by Chinese defenders of the Great Wall Pass at Nankow, 20 miles northeast of here.

The unconfirmed Chinese reports indicated a major engagement was being fought in the vicinity of Nankow with the reinforced Chinese divisions effectively defending their positions below the mountain-top wall from the advance of the Japanese army seeking to bring Chaha Province under its domination.

Destruction of the Japanese unit was said to have taken place West of Nankow, Nankow is just north of Hogeh Province border on the highly-important military railroad from Peiping through Chahar to the Provincial Capital at Kalgan.

HIGHWAY POLICE "TRY COURTESY" SAYS INSPECTOR

Like Doctors, Their Job is to Prevent as Well as Cure

LAUDS DRIVE

Toronto, Aug. 10—To "try courtesy" is just as important an item in the duties of a highway motorcycle patrol officer, generally but erroneously known as a "speed cop", as it is to every one of the 800,000 people who operate motor vehicles on the streets and highways of Ontario.

This is the firm conviction of Staff Inspector J. A. Grant, in charge of the motorcycle patrol branch of the Ontario Provincial Police Force, and is a conviction which he insists every one of his officers puts into practice while on duty, and that means, 24 hours a day.

"To a great many drivers" stated Inspector Grant in an interview yesterday, "it seems the sole duty of a motorcycle patrol officer is to arrest or summon speeders and reckless drivers and then dismiss them into court. Unquestionably, that is one of their important functions. In that way, they are often called on to perform their duty of enforcing the various sections of the Highway Traffic Act and making the roads of this province safe arteries of transportation and travel.

"You might term that the 'curative' side of their job, but just like doctors, they have another and perhaps more important function, and that is their 'preventive' work. Mr. McQuesten, the Minister of Highways, urges all drivers to 'try Courtesy,' and his campaign undoubtedly prevents a great many traffic accidents and fatalities.

"But we insist that the members of our force be courteous at all times. That doesn't mean, of course, that they are expected to salute, tip their hat, or bow from the waist, rather than issue a summons. That isn't our conception of real courtesy.

"What we do demand of them is that they prevent drivers and pedestrians from making hazardous use of the highways, and by courteous and friendly advice and direction, do everything they can to prevent infractions of the Highway Traffic Act which might result in prosecution and point out clearly driving or walking technique which might result in an accident.

"Improper conduct enumerated in a few of the ways in which motorcycle officers carry out this policy of the force:

1. By pretending unreasonably slow distance from holding up a long line of traffic, with a request to increase their speed or use secondary roads where the burden of traffic is lighter.

2. By drawing attention to "minor infractions" which might cause other motorists to become an accident—such as entering a main highway without coming to a full stop, even though there is no on-coming traffic; making turns or stopping, though giving proper hand signals; driving with glaring headlights, and the like.

3. Warning pedestrians to walk facing toward on the highway on the shoulder of the road, and at night to wear a light-colored garment, so that they are made more visible to motorists.

"Jaywalking or highway habits to children on their way to and from school, and forcefully demonstrating to motorists and pedestrians that highway courtesy and care are the basic factors in highway safety.

TOURISTS WAIT TO SEE QUINTS

Ill or Well, The Five Famous Sisters Remain an Attraction

Callander, Ont., Aug. 10 (CP)—Ill or well, the Dionne quintuplets keep a steady stream of dollars pouring into the Ontario tourist industry. Their current illness, instead of decreasing their power as an attraction, has increased it.

There was no drop in the number of visitors to the Dafoe Nursery last week when Emilie was ill, in fact hundreds came only on the chance of seeing the ailing quint at her isolation ward window.

Today hundreds of tourists are in the district to see the famous three-year-olds and few have been discouraged by the illness. Dr. Dafoe's announcement yesterday that best odds would keep them from entertaining visitors for two or three days.

The majority of the tourists decided to stay in the district until they got well and the tourist camps and hotels are reaping a harvest. Many of the visitors have gone north to fishing camps to wait out the two or three days.

BAND MUSIC

No finer demonstration of the power of music and the attraction of a good band is necessary than the exhibition of public approval and interest in Sunday evening's concert at the Fair Grounds by the Belleville Municipal Band and the R.C.A.F. Band from the Airport. There was possibly the largest crowd of music lovers which has ever gathered at one time. The bandsmen and their conductors had their reward in the knowledge of public appreciation.

Thousands were brought together in and around the exhibition park. They were suffering from heat which has maintained its grip upon the country for many days and they found the best solace and means of forgetfulness in music.

In a time like this when there are worries in many lives and discords in the body politic and when economists do not agree and many are out of work and taxes are high, what better means of bringing the people together and holding them together in one large company with a unity of interest than by band music! Bands have an appeal which is inborn, for man loves music, and nothing can ever eradicate this love of song and rhythm. It is one of nature's gifts which will not die. The great satisfaction is that music is so widely recognized—all admit its power.

Belleville knows what the Municipal Band is doing, is proud of it and appreciates its service in maintaining the true spirit in the community. The city also appreciates the visit of the R.C.A.F. bandsmen and their contribution. Too great praise cannot be given these men who have organized their band, for in peace or war the band is an organization which endures.

SAFER HIGHWAYS

It should be a point of honour to obey the highway traffic laws at all times. There would then be less opportunities for accidents.

That means taking no chances with yourself or with anyone else. To take chances is a tragic gesture in many cases. Ample allowance must be made for the hazards of the roadways.

The toll on the highways are maintained at a very high level, a level which staggers the imagination at the victims whose lives are crushed out or who are maimed.

Sooner or later this holocaust of deaths, this slaughter to the moloch of the highways, must stop. Double highways with boulevards between seem to be reasonably safe. There is no chance of a head-on meeting a car head-on. There still would remain the slight chance of a sideswipe. Such highways will probably become general, they are cheaper, no matter what the cost than the slaughter of hundreds of citizens each year, for the value of six hundred lives to the province is more than all the value of the highways put together or the cost of any necessary new construction.

Stiffening of penalties for highway infractions will probably come as the final deterrent.

That which should mean so much happiness and pleasure—the mortorcar—is becoming a nightmare to many with the risks incident to travel on roads where accidents are so numerous. This condition must not continue.

THE ROSS'S GOOSE

Canada has many kinds of wild geese, and throughout the greater part of the Dominion they are highly migratory. One of the earliest signs of spring is the winging northward of these conspicuous birds to their nesting grounds in the far north, and a sure sign of the onset of winter is their southward flight. Their unerring instinct in travelling the skyways has intrigued man from the earliest times.

One of the least widely known of the wild geese of Canada is Ross's Goose. It is a small white goose no larger than a wild Mallard duck. It winters in California and in migration travels along a narrow line which takes it across the Rockies to Montana, northward through Alberta, and then somewhere beyond Great Slave Lake or Great Bear Lake it flies off into the unknown to nest no one knows where.

The Biological Survey of the United States has announced that one of its waterfowl observers may attempt the solution of this last waterfowl mystery of the continent, and others are known to be interested in solving the mystery. The Department of Mines and Resources, through the National Parks Bureau and the Northwest Territories administration has helped the investigators by issuing permits, and the race is to the swiftest. Meanwhile, the nesting-place of Ross's Goose remains one of the mysteries of the Arctic.

THE SONG OF LIFE

My song of life was mute and stilled
As I sat pondering on life's woe.
Earth's melody no longer thrilled;
All that I prized had been laid low.

When from the tender fields of sky
A lark came singing, as he flew,
A golden, glorious, heavenly song,
Forever old,—forever new.

This song of love, and sun, and stars,
Brought cheer and hope to mind and heart;
And now in life's triumphant choir
I shall not play a songless part.

NEVERMORE

The landlady of a popular boarding house in the mountains made a point of asking her departing guests to write something in her visitor's book. She was very proud of some of the names of the people inscribed in it, and of the nice things that they wrote.

"But there is one thing I can't understand," she confided to a friend, "and that is what a sour-looking man put in the book after stopping here. People always smile when they read it!"

"What was it?" queried the other.

The landlady replied: "He wrote only the words, 'Quoth the raven'."

However, we may have an open winter—open to objections or otherwise, or a fine old fashioned Canadian winter where it never gets very cold and never gets very warm—let's not go into that now, but wait for the weather prophets who hung up such a bad record last fall.

DISCORD ON THE QUAY

A quartet of longshoremen were singing on the waterfront when the tenor fell off the dock into the bay. The incident passed unnoticed by the leader, but he realized that something was wrong with the harmony. "Smatter with you boys?" he complained. "One of you don't sound right." "It's Jack," rumbled the basso, solemnly. "He's off the beat."

CHAPTER I.

Smart and trim in her new spring outfit, Judith Howard stepped briskly from an elevator of the town's tallest office building and made her way through the noon-hour crowd to the wide entrance. There she took up an unobtrusive spot beyond the main stream of pedestrian traffic, and waited.

There were other girls waiting in the shadow of the big entrance, and there were scores of them passing hurriedly on their way to lunch. But none were more pert, more honestly attractive, than Judith Howard. She had the assurance that comes only to those who have made, and are making, their own way in the world. An assurance that is different from poise, and somehow more genuine—because poise is something which can be acquired in lifeless and so has nothing at all to do with character.

She was medium tall; rather slender in build, and while perhaps none of her features were classic in themselves, nevertheless they formed a composite whole which was the very essence of beauty. Judith's eyes were neither blue nor gray, but something intriguingly between. The color of her hair was delightfully definite. In the day of Judith's mother it would have been called "taffy" or "tow." When older men glimpsed it they were reminded happily of ripe corn in the fields of their youth. When younger men saw it they remembered the fields of maize, but they were just as pleased. And there was plenty of it. Not too much, but just enough. Her absurd fall hat (which looked not at all absurd on Judith) made no secret of how she rolled it up at the nape of her neck, sensibly and securely.

She was somewhere between 20 and 26, and it was almost impossible to tell to which age she was nearest. About the time you decided that she was hardly past 20, should would look grave and serene, and pearer 26. But if you happened to be a young man—or even an old one—you did not care, particularly because, which ever age she was nearest, Judith Howard was charming.

It was just this strange quality of change, this alternating gravity and gaiety, which had attracted Stephen Fowler a year ago—and held him steadily since then. Four years is a long time when one is young, to love, and, as he often told them waiting for Steve, she wondered how much longer it would be before they would marry. Four years they knew each other and had planned to marry for at least three of those.

Oblivious to the passing throng, forgetful of the need for haste in her tardiness, Judith fell to musing about those four years. As clearly as if it had been day before yesterday she remembered their meeting. It was at a skiing excursion up to Virginia Brent, and it had been Virginia who had first met Steve Fowler between Judith and Steve. On the way home that night, stop with a robe in the back seat of Robert Bendix car, Steve had talked with her. In a whisper, Judith grinned.

"Do you remember the October of 1929?" he had asked.

Judith laughed. "I've heard my elders ask that. It. Wasn't there a market crash?"

She remembered his lugubrious answer: "Yes, they planned crash sometimes, and automobiles crash frequently, but the market does something worse than that. I don't think there's a word for it."

Judith smiled when she thought of that. Everyone had still been talking about the crash then. Nobody—yet—was willing to believe in a depression.

"But the reason I brought it up," Steve had said, "was because I—Well?"

He looked down at her, and she had been unable to tell whether or not he was serious. "If I'd met you before fatal October, I think we'd be Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Fowler by now."

Judith remembered that, standing there in front of the big office building where she worked, and in front of the big office building where she hoped to work. She had dropped from a position as secretary down to a job as typist—and an overworked typist at that.

He had taken her skates with him on that first night and, when she said, he knew of the "only place in town" where they could be properly sharpened. And of course, once they were sharpened you had to return them to—her. That was the beginning. Judith could not remember so clearly all that had happened between then and now. There had been happy times, and there had been tearful ones, too, because they were in love.

She wouldn't have traded any of them. She wouldn't have wanted to go back to that first day, and relive these last four years without Steve Fowler. And yet . . . yet she knew that they couldn't go on forever, being engaged and in love. But he always wanted to wait a little while longer. It had been a blow to him when he had stopped being a sales manager and become only a salesman with a quota to meet instead of a quota to set. But gradually he had forgotten that, and had started to work with a will. Gradually he was climbing back—but not fast enough to suit Judith. Not to the point where he felt he should marry.

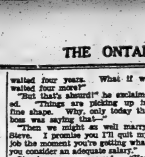
x x

From the very first, Judith had frowned at marriage wherein she retained her job and helped out with the expenses. But Steve could never quite see it. Steve had always had the idea that a husband should support his wife wholly and support her well. Because he couldn't do it he had become increasingly bitter and difficult.

"I'm tired of hearing these kids talk out of school waiting because they can't get a job," he told Judith one day. "And I'm just as tired of hearing these old boys in their white-lined waistcoats yelling that things aren't what they used to be. At least the kids have everything before them, and the old boys have something to remember. But the fellows around my age are stuck right. A little too old to learn, and a little too young to have piled up any advantage before the crash came."

"You mustn't get bitter," Judith had warned sensibly. "You have to remember that few men hold on to the 'advantage' they'd managed to pile up. Right now, Steve, you're better off than the man I work for. You don't owe any money, and you haven't any obligations to keep people employed. You haven't taxes that—"

"Just the same, sometimes I wonder if I don't belong to the fabled lost generation."



"It's not like you, Steve, to indulge in self-pity," Judith told him.

That conversation had been typical of dozens they had gone thru' the past year or so. It seemed to Judith that all their recent meetings degenerated into bickerings that got nowhere. And the straightening was that Steve was changing. He was no longer the old, considerate Steve. It was at his impotence against economic conditions had turned him inward toward himself instead of outward toward the girl he loved.

Judith was afraid—and because she was afraid she had resolved to make one final effort to convince Steve that her original proposition had been right. He had a good job with a promising future; and she had a passable job which would help things out until Steve's future transformed itself into the present. It was so utterly sane. And Stephen Fowler must be made to see that it was both.

If he didn't—

Protectively, Judith's mind clicked against that possibility. Days ago she had made up her mind as to her course if he still refused to be sensible. But she did not want to believe that he'd fail to be sensible. She did not want to believe that he'd fail to choose Judith Howard and to choose between her and his foolish pride.

"Hello, Judith;. . . Darned sorry I'm late." Fellow dropped in just as I was leaving, and I couldn't get away."

Startled by Steve's voice at her shoulder, she turned swiftly, and there must have been a part of her thoughts reflected in her eyes, for he added: "What's up, Judie? You look as if you had something on your mind."

"I have Steve. Can we go somewhere for lunch where we can talk?"

"We can ring" said Steve, troubled. "We can get a booth at this place around the corner."

He did not speak again until they were settled in the little cafe. When they had ordered, he leaned toward her and said, "Shoot, darling. hope nothing serious has happened."

"I hope it isn't serious, either." She smiled bravely. "This is Leap year, Steve. I'm going to propose to you."

He sat back, relief written large on his face. "Gosh . . . when I saw you there in front of the building I thought you'd had bad news from home or something. If it's just a leap year proposal, why—I can take it!"

"Can you, Steve? That's what I want to know."

He regarded her a moment. "Look here, Judith, what are you getting at? I hope you haven't got me in a corner just to bring up the old question."

"That's just what I've done," she told him evenly. "I'm doing it because you can't put your arms around me and argue me out of it, Steve. There's going to be no kisses and no tears this time. You don't want to go on like this. We've

He did not speak again until they were settled in the little cafe. When they had ordered, he leaned toward her and said, "Shoot, darling. hope nothing serious has happened."

"I hope it isn't serious, either." She smiled bravely. "This is Leap year, Steve. I'm going to propose to you."

He sat back, relief written large on his face. "Gosh . . . when I saw you there in front of the building I thought you'd had bad news from home or something. If it's just a leap year proposal, why—I can take it!"

"Can you, Steve? That's what I want to know."

He regarded her a moment. "Look here, Judith, what are you getting at? I hope you haven't got me in a corner just to bring up the old question."

"That's just what I've done," she told him evenly. "I'm doing it because you can't put your arms around me and argue me out of it, Steve. There's going to be no kisses and no tears this time. You don't want to go on like this. We've wailed four years. What if we waited four more?"

"But that's absurd!" he exclaimed. "Things are picking up in fine shape. Why, only today the boss was saying that—"

"Then we might as well marry, Steve. I promise you I'll quit my job the moment you're getting what you consider an adequate salary."

Steve's eyes narrowed. "You know how I feel about that. I won't have my wife working. If a man can't support a girl he hasn't a right to ask her to marry him."

"It appears that I'm asking you, Steve. Would that make any difference?"

He reached for her hand across the table. "Let's not juggle words, Judith. You know what I think about it."

"Bob and Virginia Bent made a go of it. I don't see why we shouldn't."

"Bob Bent!" snorted Steve. "What's it done for him? It's developed him into a loafing wife'd be scared to death if his wife lost her job! No, Judith—that's out."

She looked at him a long moment. She drew in her breath, exhaled it sharply. "Then . . . I'm out, too."

"You don't mean that, Judith?" But already he could see in her eyes that she did mean it, every word of it.

"I have," he said suddenly, bitterly. "Virginia Bent has been talking to you!" I can hear her saying it—"You're fooled around with Steve's pride for three or four years now, and you're getting no younger fast." That's probably what she's been feeding you."

"Virginia had nothing to do with it. You know me well enough to know that I can make a decision on my own, Steve."

"But that's what Virginia things and I know it. She never misses a chance to tell you how delightfully happy she and Bob are—"

"And they are happy."

"No doubt of it," said Steve shortly. "But I'm not Bob Bent."

x x

Uncertainly Judith got to her feet. "I'm afraid I don't feel like eating. I'll . . . I just go back to the office."

"Judith! Judy, darling." Steve was instantly contrite. Hastily he grabbed his hat and walked out of the cafe close in her side. "I didn't mean to get so emotional about it. We can't discuss things sensibly on the street, Judith. Let me come to your apartment tonight."

She shook her head. "That's no good, Steve. I—"

Heedless of passersby he took her in his shoulder and turned her to face him. "Look at me, Judith. We're been in love for four years. I'm in love right now. I'm going to cut off in a minute like this, I won't let it be."

"But it's got to be." Judith told him, trying to keep her voice calm and not succeeding very well. "I've thought it all out, Steve. It isn't just a spur of the moment thing. I've—I've segr it coming for a long time. I . . . I love you, Steve. Please . . . people are staring."

"All right, then!" His hands dropped to his sides. "But I'm coming over tonight."

That night Judith spent hours toward the building, scurried into the office, and then, with a sigh, sat the office dressing room none too long for hardly was she through the door before the tears welled up in her eyes. Unmindful that the rest of the girls would soon be coming in from lunch, she leaned her head against the wall and wept.

The door opened suddenly and Virginia Bent's arms were around Judith and she was sobbing on her shoulder. "Listen, Judith, will you reason it it I help you out of it. Of course we'll pretend we don't know anything's up."

Judith was silent, meeting Virginia's suspicious gaze. "I want to see him alone for a few minutes, Virginia. I'll let him know that

x x

For a moment Virginia said nothing, but her glance held plenty of meaning. At last she spoke. "Judith, you're a double-hearted sap about that man. Here you get yourself all worked up to a clean break, and then you spoil it."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean you should have left him finally there on the sidewalk. If you see him again, you'll have everything to do over again."

Judith shook her head. "I'm not bluffing, Virginia."

"Of course you're not. But I know what love can do to a girl. All her brains come out into her hands, and then anything can happen—She stopped a moment. Then: "Listen, Judith, will you resent it if I help you out of this?"

"But I don't need help."

"Let me be the judge of that. Your only hope is to have other people around if Steve shows up on—night. Don't let him get you out of your decision. I'll drop in with Bob and we'll make a little party out of it. Of course we'll pretend we don't know anything's up."

Judith was silent, meeting Virginia's suspicious gaze. "I want to see him alone for a few minutes, Virginia. I'll let him know that

x x

my talk today wasn't a spur of the moment thing. You and Bob drop over around 8."

"All right," said Virginia resignedly. "But we'll bring Toby Larch along. He's the life of any party, and he'll take out any ladies you and Steve may have hung around the room before we get there."

How Judith got through her afternoon's work she would never quite know. As she had told her friend, she had always believed that in a situation like this she could be sane and sensible. But apparently that had been because, subconsciously, she'd known too long it could never happen to her. During the past few months when the logic of her brain had begun to tell her that it might happen, she had ignored the warning.

Like an automaton she went through her office routine until 5 and she was grateful when Virginia appeared by her desk with, "Not going to work all night, are you, darling?" Together they hurried to catch an early car to the apartment; and, as often happened, they encountered Toby Larch on the same car. Virginia's husband was in his usual good humor.

"Good evening, charming ladies!" he greeted them. "Did you put over any big deals today?"

"Judith did," said Virginia. "She sold Steve Fowler short, and came out 'way ahead."

"Oh!" He looked at Judith sympathetically. "Say, that's too bad! I hope—" He was interrupted by a sharp nudge from his wife. "Well" he began again, attempting to laugh "easy come, easy go, Judith."

x x

Virginia caught a glimpse of Judith's face and quickly veered the conversation into safer channels. To all appearances, Judith had temporarily forgotten the matter by the time they reached the apartment building where both the Bents and Stephen Howard lived.

"Better have dinner with us tonight," Virginia invited her as the trio went up in the automatic lift.

Judith shook her head. "Thanks a lot, but I've some food left over from yesterday—and my Frugal New England nature won't let it chance spoiling."

Bob was about to suggest that they pool their kitchen resources but it occurred to him at the risk of time that, under the circumstances, Judith might prefer to be by herself.

He was correct—partly. For while Judith did want to be alone for a while, she touched nothing in the way of food. Once inside her little apartment she dropped her hat and coat on a chair and sank wearily on the davenport. She sat there not moving. She sat there, hardly thinking. It was as if a part of her had died.

Then gradually, as the fatigure of the day wore off, she began to think of her life with Stephen Fowler. It seemed such a large part of her life, this part she had spent with him almost always in her thoughts. And when she told herself, "It was only four years . . . and with every other those four years will grow less important," she could not really believe it.

Judith rose at last, bathed her face in cold water and slipped into a cool frock. She had barely finished dressing when Steve's ring at the door startled her. Listlessly she went to the door and opened it.

"Hello, Steve."

EMILIE, HOLDS UP QUINT "PERSONAL APPEARANCES"

This little girl has had people the world over worried about her health. Of course you recognize tiny Emilia Dionne, the quint who has been confined to the hospital because she became ill with the heat. Now Dr. Defoe has announced cancellation of the two regular "personal appearances" of the famed five girls. No reason has been given for the cancellation. But reliable sources give the reason as slight colds. Emilie doesn't seem to be worried about anything in this photograph, does she?—Photo World Copyright, 1937.

There's an Old Fashioned Lady

So many magazines today seem wholly devoted to the praise of the latest film stars, rating politicians and the most exclusive fashionable gowns from Paris, etc., that one subject seems to be neglected—that of the dear mother of a family. This sweet, unselfish soul lives just to make our lives the happier. Gather round, folks, and let us give praise to the greatest gift that God ever gave to mankind—a good Mother.

Let us look back into the years. Remember your first glimpse of her as she held you in her arms and you tried to say "Mother" but mangled only to splutter some word like "Goo goo". Yet she knew the language you spoke and kissed your baby brow in ecstasy.

Remember too, when the shadows of evening gathered on the wall like so many huge ogres, how she sat by your cot and calmed your fears until you reached with safety the "Land of Nod." Dear, dear Mother, how much she loved you!

The loving hand that piloted you through those happy baby years has sterner yet safer into the great "Kingdom of Grown Ups." You find yourselves now members of a vast community, enjoying the pleasures and assistances of a gay world. Friends galore; riches, maybe; success in moderation. What of your little Mother?

She rests ever there in the old "rocker" thinking, thinking....

The long years has whitened the glorious brown of her hair which you loved to brush. The dear face has grown thin and tiny furrows run across her brow.

Her eyes remain as beautiful as ever. In them you can fathom the wondrous beauty of her soul. The long years cannot undermine the marvelous light in her eyes.

As you watch her, you realize that with a gnawing pain at your heartstrings, that your own dear Mother is fading....

Slowly, time has taken its toll and it will not be long 'ere her sweet spirit takes flight. So, bring her flowers often: white flowers especially, as a token of the sweet purity she instilled into your life.

When the tragic day dawns and the arm-chair is empty, then you know that the angel of peace has come for your Mother to add to the fragrance of the "Immortal Garden."

Advice to the Lovelorn

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.
(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

"Told Her to Stop Talking to Him, and That Started the Fireworks"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Two years ago when I came home from my Easter Vacation, I fell in love with a girl at first sight. We were introduced formally, and when I returned to my home town we had a few dates. Thinking she did not really like me, I didn't see her for some months. She asked what was the matter. We made up, and last Christmas became engaged.

When I asked her to set the date for our marriage, she told me to wait till my debts were cleared up. One night I saw her out with another man. She said there was nothing between them. I told her to stop talking to him, and that started the fireworks. Soon after this she broke the engagement.

Now she sees this man once a week. She also says he's a drunkard. I hear new that she hopes I won't find another girl. I have written her many letters, but no answer. I would do anything in the world to get her back. Please, tell me I'm silly for caring so much.

B. H.

I'm sure you will write me in a day or two, telling me you and the girl are reconciled, and that the wedding bells will ring in the near future. It's always like that, my dear man, when a girl says she hopes you won't find another somebody. You might vary your letters with a little originality. The wedding day hasn't already been named.

Gets a Date Anytime He Asks for It

Dear Miss Fairfax:

No question about our loving each other intensely. Yet I heard some rumors, which unexpectedly got back to me, to the effect that he had no intention of marrying me.

We don't go "steady," but I know he can have a date any time he asks me. Would it be well to refuse him a few dates, so he won't feel too sure of himself? And yet I'm afraid, if I do, he might not come back.

L. A.

Strategy is never certain, either in love or war. The planner of a campaign must take a chance. A young man who is never refused a date may get a wrong opinion of his powers to charm, and seek the society which has the spice of uncertainty.

To "turn them down" occasionally is considered good tactics.

She Agrees With Mr. X

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Not long ago I read a letter in your column from a man who signed himself "Mr. X." He said he didn't understand why he doesn't want to kiss every Jane he meets.

My case is different from his. Boys say I'm not human because I don't want to run around in their cars and neck with every one. Dad and Harry, I am 17 and love dancing, swimming and all out-of-door sports, even baseball. But boys don't understand. They think it's neck or nothing.

I have a small flower garden I have grown myself, and everyone makes fun of it and me. They seem to think it's funny that I like to walk through the woods and gather flowers

I never meet anyone like "Mr. X." He certainly sounds sane to me.

Y

Please let me remind you that the Mary of "Mary Mary, quite contrary, how does your garden grow?" was a very charming young person. She was far too busy to be augmented by the primitives who see nothing beyond flecking. And while you may never meet another particular "Mr. X," any man of taste would prefer to marry a girl who loved the wholesome out of doors flowers, rather than one who had no resources but necking.

PICTON

Picton—Picton relatives received word of the death on Sunday afternoon in an automobile accident at Clinton, Ont., of Mrs. R. Hamilton and daughter. Miss Betty Hamilton and of the serious condition of Mr. Hamilton in the hospital at Clinton. Mrs. Hamilton, previous to her marriage was Miss Rose Bongard of Picton, and her home was at Exeter, near Clinton. She was killed instantly, when the driver of the car lost control of the machine. Mr. Hamilton was removed to the hospital at Clinton, but only lived a short time. Mrs. Jane Ann Bongard, her aunt, Mrs. Sam Welsh and Mr. Harold Welsh left Picton for Clinton early on Monday morning and Mrs. Lee Bongard of Picton, are brothers of the deceased woman.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Lipson motored to Muskoka on Thursday to visit their son Stanley, who is spending the summer in camp there.

Mrs. Walter Nicholas, who underwent a very successful operation in the local hospital on Thursday is making favourable progress towards recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Fullerton were pleasantly surprised on Friday evening when about forty guests of honour at a Beach party at the Outlet, arranged a shower of friends in honour of their eighth wedding anniversary. Some amusement was created when Mr. and Mrs. Fullerton had to ride to the party in a car decorated with white streamers reminiscent of their wedding day, but a very jolly time was reported by all present.

Birthdays for Receiving Only?

Wise Practice is For Child Also to Give to Brother, Sister

By LISA GRENELLE

DIANA WAS "impossible" on her birthday. From an amiable, adorable six-year old, she became peevish and pouty, and resisted discipline. She was disappointed about something. She insisted upon occupying the centre of the stage every moment, making a pest of herself, and the life of the family (especially Brother Billie's) was miserable. Diana ended the day in tears.

Now I'm not of those who believe wholly in the adage that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." I think giving without receiving becomes very tiresome. Still, being always on the receiving end is even more depressing and disappointing. Giving, no matter how unwise, unnecessary or unappreciated, is at least active. But receiving is purely passive, inactive, negative—and what one of us can find any real nourishment, pride or pleasure in a purely passive state? No, receiving is tiresome and unimportant.

I believe in birthdays. I believe in a big to-do. I believe in each child being allowed to have a day on which he is King.

Giving is Greater

But sitting around waiting for presents that are so often disappointing is not the best, or yet the most effective, way of getting a sense of importance. Giving certainly gives you a greater sense of importance. A greater sense of power probably because giving is active.

It is better for the child's character to guide him into taking an active rather than a passive part on his birthday. Encourage him to spend his time and thought in planning on each other's birthdays in years rather than moping about imagining what he is going to get.

It is all in the point. He always knows what he is for his party, not the children of his mothers friends. He should choose the favors, plan the amusements and select the refreshments. Guests' manners should be his responsibility. The is enough to make anyone feel important.

Then, the boy or girl whose birthday it is should choose and give a little something to another member of the family. Encourage that children should be trained not to expect anything on each other's birthdays, and that is a good principle, when they are old enough to understand. But for little brothers and sisters, a small compensating present is. I think, a very wise thing. It prevents jealousy, that "left-out" feeling.

Housewife Who Would Retain Her Charm Must Find Time For Proper Rest, Relaxation

By HELEN FOLLETT

IT IS the opinion of this prescher of pulchritude that the best exercise the boss of the domestic "works" can get is a nap after luncheon. After cleaning up the house, bathing the baby, going to market, washing out a few things, answering the telephone and door bell every 15 minutes, a woman isn't particularly keen about exercising. She needs relaxation.

What this home woman must learn is that she must do her work with as little loss of energy as possible. Much depends upon her viewpoint. If she hates housework, she is bound to be tired. If she takes pride in her home, her tasks won't seem laborious.

She must remember not to bend over the dishes when washing them but to stand upright if she is to preserve her youthful shape. The same rule holds true when ironing; the board must be the right heighth. When using the vacuum cleaner, she must bend at the hips, not at the waistline. If she feels hurried and jittery, she must sit down and count 10 slowly, even though the baby is howling.

Shorter skirts are being worn for evening occasions. That means closer survey of ankles. They must be tender. Use lotion if need be.

What if they aren't? Well, you'll have to get busy. Sit on a stool, hands on hips, toes leg over the other. Lift the toes, lower the heel and do your ankles, and repeat. You will notice considerable action of the muscles of ankles and calves.

Stand erect, up on the toes 10 times, then rest, breathe deeply three times, and repeat. The deep breathing will lighten up the fibres around the mid-section—two beauty rules in one.

GOOD MANNERS

by MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Good manners [wk-v1w 7.n

Serving at Table

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Sometimes at Christmas time we run short of our own personal printed greeting cards and resort to cards to which we add our names in our own handwriting. With married couples, it is usually the wife who writes the cards. Will you please tell me if the lady's name should precede, or vice versa? Should she sign "Frank and Ruth" or "Ruth and Frank"? I have always used the former, as in the account in an Oshawa, Ont., paper dated 1st Wednesday, Oct., to face trial; released from jail on order of an Ontario justice who quashed the charges against her and rearrested within 50 minutes of her release by the superior court. Mrs. Emily K. Drakes (above) of Luton, Mrs. Drakes, according to the Justice Jeffery, of Toronto, was not the person mentioned in the information allegedly served on her husband, Meshith, of Whitby. The woman was rearrested following her release on a new warrant in connection with the same cheque issued on new information laid by the same complainant.

IN LAW MIXUP

Arrested in England on charges of uttering a forged cheque for $500 on an account in an Oshawa, Ont., bank, Mrs. Emily K. Drakes, according to that Justice Jeffery, of Toronto, was not the person mentioned in the information allegedly served on her husband, Meshith, of Whitby. The woman was rearrested following her release on a new warrant in connection with the same cheque issued on new information laid by the same complainant.

2. Foods are always passed at the left of the person dining. This is because of the obvious convenience to the person. But, since the person dining has nothing to do with the dishes that are being removed, it makes no real difference whether the plates are removed from th left or the right. In the majority of cases, however, plates are removed from the left. All beverages are served at the right.

Hostess Loads

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please inform me if the host or hostess walks first when showing guests their house or property, regardless of sex or age? In public dining rooms, who should follow the head waiter?

S.

Because of the greater convenience, it is best for the host or hostess to walk first when showing guests their house or property, regardless of the age or sex of the guests. And it is all more polite and gracious if the host or hostess stays at the side of the guests. You ask if I lead the way? I am sure that you will agree that this will be more convenient.

In a restaurant it is the usual custom for the man to step aside and let the woman precede him, following the head waiter. But I have no enthusiasm for this custom, for it seems to me rather senseless. Why isn't it more sensible and convenient for everyone concerned for the man to follow the headwaiter, to call him to table (or two, please", and to be conveniently near to suggest what position of table is best for the lady in case the man who knows his way around knows about kind of table he wants, and just as important, what kind of table he doesn't want, and doesn't accept and then to see that the last one available, and even then may prefer to wait just because the headwaiter indicates it to him.

Rings For Men

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Please settle this question which concerns a friend and myself. "A" says that the signet ring can be worn on the right hand, while the birthstone ring is worn on the left hand. B says that it isn't good taste to wear both at the same time. Who is right?

B.

B is right . . . for a man to wear a signet ring on one hand and a birthstone ring on the other would certainly make him appear too "jewelled"! "Ring" might be the word.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE CAPITOL

"Crack-Up" and "Michael O'Halloran"

A thrill-packed melodrama of flying aces, foreign spies and modern romance.

"Crack-Up" commencing at the Capitol Theatre on Wednesday as Sun. No. 1 is a thrilling, pulsating entertainment that will keep patrons on the edges of their seats with its fast action and suspense, right up to the exciting surprise climax. The story opens at the christening of a giant plane, designed to pioneer trans-Atlantic travel service. Ralph Morgan, builder of the plane; Brian Donlevy, famous ace who is to fly it; Thomas Beck, his co-pilot; and Peter Lorre, half-mad cripple, mascot of the airport, are present.

Beck idolizes Donlevy, who is ready the tool of a foreign spy ring. To excite Beck's sympathy he tells him that the manufacturer for whom Beck's mother, Helen Wood, works, has stolen the plans of a propeller which he invented. At Helen's office that night, Beck steals the plans from her files, without her knowledge, and gives them to Donlevy. The same evening Morgan discovers that his wife loves his partner, and, with Donlevy and Beck, hops off on a secret flight across the Atlantic.

The plans are missed, Helen questioned, and investigators realize at once they are on the plane. Lorre, a stowaway, appears, and says he is the foreign spy to whom Donlevy was to sell the plans. A dramatic radio message from Helen tells Beck the real truth and he savagely attacks Donlevy, with Lorre joining in the battle for the plans. The plane has crashed during the fight and is sinking rapidly. The final scene provides a most unusual and thrilling climax to a picture loaded with thrills.

"Michael O'Halloran"

Now and then a picture comes out of Hollywood that leaves a lasting mellow kindliness in the hearts of all who view it. Such a picture is "Michael O'Halloran", a version of the widely-read Gene Stratton-Porter novel at the Capitol, starting Wednesday as hit No. 2.

Though departing somewhat from the book, the chances serve to heighten the interest and intensify the characterizations, and the result is unforgettable entertainment of the very highest order.

Cast in the leading roles are Wynne Gibson and Sidney Blackmer, both of them seasoned actors who know how to handle mature roles with dignity and charm. Hope Manning and Warren Hull supply the love interest in a manner that does credit to themselves and their studio.

The title role of "Mickey" O'Halloran is taken by young Jackie Moran, who scored a wide success in "Valiant is The Word For Carrie". Charlene Wyatt, another appealing youngster, portrays his little crippled sister and establishes herself as one of the foremost juvenile actress of Hollywood.

For those who forget the essence of the story, Michael O'Halloran is a young orphan befriended by a selfish woman of the world who, wants to prove, by faked devotion to two friendless waifs, that she deserves the custody of her own two boys. In time, however, this faked devotion changes to genuine devotion, and she is forced to make a dramatic decision which, as the plot unrolls, brings her happiness and reunites her family.

Today Only

Shown for the last times today two grand revival features of yester-year. At 2:25 p.m., "The Farmer Takes a Wife" starring Janet Gaynor and as a hit No. 2 the sequel to "Call of the Wild", "White Fang."

SWIMS FOR RELIEF TO SAVE FRIENDS

The formula for success according to the movies is "Boy meets girl ...boy rescues girl...boy marries girl," but in the case of Marjorie Murray and Arnold McCloat, the script must now be revised to read "Girl rescues boy." Marjorie is the heroine who swam four miles through a raging sea in the dark to bring aid to Arnold and two other persons after heavy seas had wrecked their motorboat off Far Rockaway, Long Island. Looking little the worse for their experience, the heroine and her fiance are shown in Miss Murray's home.

GAS MASKS — A NEW ENGLISH CUSTOM

SEARING ITALIAN FLAME-THROWER GIVES HINT OF POSSIBLE FUTURE E WARS

A preview of what is in store for enslaved Italy in a possible future war is this searing flame thrower with which most all of Italy's newest army tanks are equipped. The flame throwers are being tested, having been used by Italy during the conquest of Ethiopia. The photograph was taken at Sibaly, Italy, during preparations for Italy's great war maneuvers to be held on the island. The weapon serves a two-fold purpose, providing a smoke screen that hides the advancing tanks and literally consuming everything that stands in its path.

CORBIN LOCKS TAKE AAJMAAS TO EVEN SERIES

Score is 16-5 And The Issue Never Being in Doubt

PLAY TONIGHT

Winner Will Take on Point Anne For Softball Title

Corbin Locks and Aajmaa juniors will battle it out in a sudden death contest at Cataraqui Flats for the right to meet Point Anne in the finals for the city softball title; the result of a 16-5 win by the Corbins over the junior squad last evening on the same field. Corbin had to win to stay in the running as the Aajmaas had tied one and given the "Lockmen" a 2-1 defeat and the winners played first and last of a game. They were always on top, they fielded in an excellent manner and they got their hits, when runners were on the base paths, a department they have been lacking in for the last number of games.

Harold Sawtell, coach of the winners elected his brother Johnny for mound duty and the latter could not let him down. He hurled two hit ball for seven frames and when the game was in the bag, released up and the Aajmaas secured five runs in the last frame, which incidentally was played in semi darkness, to make the game more like a contest. Pitted against Sawden was "Lum" Carson, who so ably defended the Corbin colors in the first start, but he certainly lost the key to effective pitching in the last game. Corbin swatmiths sent him early to the showers and they continued their assault on Sawden and Carson, Adams, who succeeded on the hillstop. The Corbins secured their initial tally ranging from puny singles to mammoth homers. They were beat out by Tuttle in the second frame with two aboard was the one, that decided the pastime. From then on it was just a parade.

Fielding Little Loose

The fielding was not as clean cut as in the previous encounters between these two teams, the Aajmaas being quite panicky in the pinches. O'Neil started around and came in on centre field but the infield was not up to standard. Bilder for the Corbins pulled the smartest play of the night by shovelling a mad one to a but while lying prone on the ground. Practically every player on the winning squad secured one or more hits, the majority of them being on a line and were all quite good for two bases. On the other hand Aajmaas were woefully weak with runners on with the result that they had eight men left on bases. Rowbottom belted one base and while his first were real steady and provided the base runners with snappy fielding plays. Reid, first baseman of the Corbins and Tapp, second sacker of the same team looked like a real ball time and had to retire but the substitutes played well in their places. The teams are rather evenly matched and no doubt will provide a snappy struggle tonight in the fourth and deciding game of the series. The

GRAHAMS SCORE A SURPRISE WIN

Defeat C.P.R. in First Game of Softball Tilts For Tip Top Cup

Trenton, Aug. 10 (Special) —It happened at Bayshore diamond last night. Gordon Derry did everything but sell tickets and usher the fans in the stands by pitching Grahams's garage softball team' to a surprising 8 to 2 win over R.C. A.F. in the first fixture of the city league finals. A record crowd saw the Garagemen's right hander limit the Flyers to two hits during the nine round tilt. The pair of safeties, that accounted for the Airmen's two runs came in the sixth inning, when Trumpeter doubled and McNeeley smashed the second home run of the contest and scored his mate's mate. Both squads went scoreless until the first of the third, when the Graham aggregation solved Spano for five timely hits, that accounted for four of the winner's tallies.

The Graham outfit scored one in the fourth and added a pair more in a three run outbreak in the final canto after being held runless for four straight. Harold Long the Grahamites smoke thrit baseman polled the longest hit of the game by sending one of the Air Force mounties-my offerings into the bay behind the right fielder for a circuit trip in the third. His teammates Bill Miller and Earl Gray each made a good appearance at bat the first gathering four singles in five times at the plate and the latter three singles and a stroll.

Anderson Smart

Don Anderson the Garagemen's snappy short stop also gave a stellar performance in the field and at bat. He collected a pair of triples to aid his side down three rivals. In gaining the triumph Derry gave up 2 hits, walked two and struck out nine of the Flyer opponent Spano tossed 18 hits, whiffed five and passed a pair of batters. Owing to the Graham teams boring staff shortage, through sickness it is expected that Derry will be assigned to face the Airport's mound ace this Wednesday night in the second match of the Tip Top Tailor trophy series. Probably "Tiny" Davis will handle the R.C.A.F. mound duties.

CHICAGO BEGINS THE 'BIG PUSH'

Expect to Take Strangle Hold on Pennant in Next Week

Chicago, Aug. 10.—(AP)—Chicago Cubs began their "Big Push" today toward taking a strangle hold on the National League pennant.

Six games in front of the second-place New York Giants, the Bruins opened a three-game series with Pittsburgh to be followed by four games against the lowly Cincinnati Reds.

Although the Cubs aren't yet talking "pennant", the feeling is rife in their clubhouse that when they set forth next Sunday night on a long road trip, the bunting will fly practically to the Bay.

With nothing to do but wait for the New York Yankees, however, that new and shortened left field fence—in the Cub's Park has many fans worried lest there are those that Joe DiMaggio and Co may drive the new wall just to their liking. The new fence, behind which there will be additional bleacher seats, is 23 feet shorter and eight feet lower than the old wall. . . It has been responsible for 15 "Charlegan Homers" in 34 games.

GREYHOUND WILL STRUT HIS STUFF

Five-Year-Old Gelding Will Try to Lower Trotting Record

Goshen, N.Y., Aug. 10 (AP) —Greyhound, the big five-year-old gelding, who has been America's premier trotter since he burst into the limelight as a two-year-old, has further story today when he attempts to lower the record of 2:01 set by the legendary Peter Manning in 1922.

The son of Guy Abbey out of Elizabeth by Peter the Great will perform over the famous half-mile sphere. The track will be the Good Time track, one of the smallest and the crowd, the combination of which cheered Barnaby's that they cheered him in a score of other efforts.

But a day at most Greyhound will divert the crowd's attention from Windsor Boy, who is running at the Hambletonian Stakes, main event of the week of Grand Circuit racing, at Goshen. As a three-year-old Greyhound won the Hambletonian and Windsor Boy is a likely 3-year-old for the latter.

Greyhound will be placed by a running mate, Dudley Hanover. The silver gelding coat his owner, T. P. Taylor of Charles, Ill., over $600 when he bought him in 1933 from Henry Knight. He won seven races and $1,000 as a two-year-old to bring in $3,292.26 in purses. He was sold to Hanover, who trotted his 3.00 miles, won the Hambletonian and Kentucky Futurity, and earned $26,712.82 for the lucky Baker and established himself as one of the great trotters in the history of the sport.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Meets)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 10.—(AP)—Henry Armstrong, former lightweight and featherweight, will be shooting for his 140th knockout in 15 starts when he tackles Scrapper "Irish Eddie" Brink here tomorrow night.

Looks like Paul Waner of the Pirates is Joe Medwick's most dangerous rival in National League batting honors this year.

Lynn Myers, shortstop for the Asheville (N.C.) Club, made himself a candidate for somebody's hall of fame by scoring seven runs in one game without being charged with an official time at bat. . . How did he do it? . . . Well, he walked five times and was hit by a pitcher on two other occasions.

. . . The Indians lost 11 out of 13 games on their last eastern trip . . . Steve O'Neill was afraid to go home.

Joe DiMaggio has hit two homers in a game four times and three in another game . . . Mickey Walker has caused a new row in the Parr Camp by advising Tommy Farr to be more mountainy for the last week of his training for Louis . . . Manager Ted Broadribb is for the Sea Parr a sgin' it. . . . Jim Weaver of the Pirates has won all his five starts this year . . . and he has been started only five times . . . Why? . . .

CRACK SHOT

When the governor-general sold small matches take place, marksmen from all over Canada will meet with some stiff opposition from Mrs. Dow, of Saint John, N.B., a crack shot with a rifle. At the Royal Ouebec Rifle Association shoot, she finished only three points behind her husband who won an important match at the meet. She is seen here with a revolver in her hand.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

Today's column is contributed by Arthur L. Cole, Belleville's well known rugby football official and, needless to say, rugby executive.

With a few of the faithful making an earnest bid for moral and financial support, the future of rugby football in this city appears somewhat brighter than before the organization meeting two weeks ago. Although far from overjoyed at the response of the sports-minded citizenry to date, this small group of gridiron enthusiasts, in a last effort to keep alive the most spectacular of all team games in your city, is attempting to raise just a "O". And that, to you and I who have never had it, is just $500.

From a figurative standpoint, prospects for a really great rugby season in Belleville were never better. From a practical point of view it must be admitted, things have never been worse. Starting at a loss last year, the Belleville Football Club faces a serious deficit. This is due in no small measure, to failure of the citizenry to turn out for the games in sufficient numbers slightly, their vocal chords in cheers and their purses in the pockets wherewithal to operate a flourishing club.

With Billy Hughes, dominant figure in Canadian rugby circles for years, secured as coach-of-the squad, and the appointment of many of the standbys of former glorious rugby achievements along with new material unearthed by Coach Hughes, Belleville fans this year can cheer themselves hoarse with joy in the game from whistle to whistle. Reports from Hughes' camp indicate a lusty bounce indicate that all three clubs are strengthening for the coming schedule. In this city the corner lumpkity submits that. for this season's finale, local city officials would be well advised to seek postponement of the B.C.A.F. in-sofar as rugby is concerned.

At least half a dozen stellar gridders of considerable experience are at present located at the Air Base station, and their presence on the local rugby would come with a added strength of opposition clubs.

At Peterboro the Orlins have clipped the cream of Lindsay's attacking backfield, including the recurring long-legged Loucks, Geoghegan, and one of two others, who the team well with Mick Magee, the mighty mouthed Irishman from Ireland who is again ready for the wars.

At Cobourg, a snappy team, which was a slight cut above the Shore teams last year, has finally secured the services of a punter, who can match kicks with, the best in the loop. The present rumors has it, will be Inger Cobourg Peck, star end receiver and propeller, of Queen's University teams for the past several seasons.

The Blue Devils of Oshawa are strangely silent, but nevertheless are no good for opposition clubs. With a fine record behind them, the Oshawa club has added strength to attack—and here your guest is guessing—probably will, hold its own—and ours.

As may have been gathered by now, the one local citizen with financial aid which in the final analysis means support. And just here, we have an idea. If every man and woman residing in this once sportsminded city would make up his or her mind to spend one hour, and a small part of a single dollar this gridiron season, in the splendid game of eager, well-conditioned athletes, cut of the old college 'try' ballings it out with representatives of another city as the Bulldog Grounds, the future of rugby here would be assured.

For those familiar with the game, the experience would be a welcome diversion. To those unversed in the great fall game, your wide-awake rugby executive is planning to install, as amplifying system for at home games, with a capable announcer to explain the plays and finer points of the game. Give it the greatest of all sport specialties, one chance this season. We think you'll like it.

This season has brought with it increased interest in the activities filled "over-the-webbing" game of tennis. Locally a splendid new club has been organized, with six beautiful clay courts laid out in a centrally-located spot, which will prove a boon to all youngsters with a leaning to a game which provides clean, keen competition.

More experienced players have been engaged in a regular schedule of tourneys with clubs in Trenton, Bowmanville, Port Hope, Grand Stirling and Peterboro. At present, the Belleville Lawn Tennis Club home courts at the Country Club, is the virtual tie with Campbellford for the leadership. Holloway Street Church Club, St. Michael's Club, the Quinte Skating Club and the Rotarians.

Each club may enter players in one or both events, and suitable trophies will be awarded the champions in each division. To prepare for the tournaments, a series entertaintain plan to call a meeting of the city and district are invited to attend. Announcement of the meeting will be made during the week.

Should the tourney be staged, it would mark the first time in recent years at least, that championship matches for this immediate district have been held and the event should bring together the tops in tennis.

BALTIMORE STILL POUNDING BALL

Wallop Rochester 12-3 With Homers Playing Important Part

(By The Associated Press)
The ready-swinging baseball staff loaned to Syracuse Chiefs by Cincinnati Reds today got pitch Syracusans into second place, in the futile International Baseball league.

Johnny Vandermeer shutout Rochester Red Wings 6 to 0 for the Chiefs last night and the club replaced a fifth place the second-place Montreal Royals.

Vandermeer struck out seven Wings and walked only three, all in the eighth inning. It was one of the few times the Chiefs, who had been scoreless for seven innings, were in trouble. They helped him out by scoring three runs in the fifth and as many in the sixth.

Still pounding the ball around their bandbox ball park Baltimore Orioles slammed out a 12-3 verdict over Buffalo Bisons. Sonny Gerlach Martin hit his fourth homer in two days. As Wright added No. 31. Lee Powers hit for the circuit in the

BEHIND RECORD

DiMaggio Needs Four Homers in 10 Games to Catch Ruth

By BILL BONI
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

There's an explosion due in Boston say day now and, if the utterances of the Red—especially those about Penny Park—haven't taken the proper precautions, then it's all their own fault.

Opening a three-day, four-game stand there this afternoon with his fellow New York Yankees was Joseph Paul DiMaggio, the San Francisco crab fisherman, who also is the major leagues' most stylish batsman this season.

That in itself is not so startling. Everybody knows about DiMaggio, both as a crab fisherman and a home-run producer, since anything to do with the fact that Penway Park is the home of Boston Red Sox—is the only American League ball park in which DiMaggio has not yet touched off one of his four-base specialties.

Has Only One Against Record

In his eight games with Tom Yawkey's high-priced hirelings, Joe has hit just one homer, and that was at Yankee Stadium off Rube Walberg, the same Rube Walberg who gave up four of the 60 four-baggers on which Babe Ruth rode to record in years ago.

There's no immediately apparent reason why the slugging southpaw should't be able to connect in Boston or against the Red Sox. Yanks' batsmen have taken six out of eight from Boston, but possibly Joe has been saving himself for good old psychological moment.

Jersey City, N.J.—Andy Jesserum, 142, New York, outpointed Johnny Ducs, 140, Apulboo, N.J., (8).

place to second and in the process displaced the White Sox as runner-up. And, as yet-proved fact—ask Jimmy Dykes—that the champions are toughest when they're stuck up against the team unfortunate enough to be trailing most closely—it's games, in this case—behind them.

Little Behind Record

Besides needing to catch up on that Boston pitching, Joltin' Joe needs to catch up with his home-run production. He hasn't delivered for exactly a week. On this date 10 years ago Ruth shouted No. 30 in his 108th game; Joe, for the 98 games, including two ties which the Yankee have played, has 26.

With inter-sectional competition out of the way for the weekend, both leagues today entered on intra-sectional series. In the American league it's Boston for Yanks and Boston, Washington was at home to the Athletics and, in the Western Division, Chicago was at Detroit and St. Louis at Cleveland.

In the National League the Cubs, six games in front, opened against the Pirates at Chicago. Of their nearest rivals, the Giants, the Bruins have been toughest for the Bruins, having a record of six victories and seven defeats. The Cardinals, meanwhile, took on the Reds, the latter returned home to take on the Bees and the Dodgers, dropping dangerously close to cellar, visited the last-place Phillies.

Heartbreak Horse

By HAL G. VERMES
©Clare Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

"But what about the horses that lose?" says Harry, the Pessimist. "All that about why or anybody else ever talks about is the winners."

"Well," I say, "it is with horses just like with people; nobody wants to hear about the failures."

"Success is a 100 to 1 shot. Harry informs me with finality, "and you should say nothing. So why sit over our glasses of porter in my stable in the hotel and we go through it. But I know what Harry is thinking about and I am thinking the same thing.

Orphan Annie was Harry's favorite filly. Which is a very surprising thing because Orphan Annie was no runaway by no manner of means, she was just a rank selling plater. But Harry kept racing her just the same.

Harry bought her when she was a little animal who could barely stand on her spindling legs. She was bred from King Cole, out of Lonesome Lady, both of whom showed what they could do on the turf before they retired a family.

The Pinhead had high hopes for Annie from the very first. He gives her an acre of turf to run around in, where she wouldn't hurt herself lovely legs. And he nursed her like a mother. By the time she was two years old Harry had her trained razor sharp and ready to gun.

At her first race Orphan Annie was now a beautiful baby filly, full of fire and crazy to run. And as she paused in the post parade, with Kid Lazrup mounted up in Harry's orange and blue silks the Pinhead was proud enough to bust all his buttons.

Orphan Annie ran beautifully but she took no chances. She won by only half a length. Harry was very disappointed indeed. Still by his rules she was ready for her second race he was all set up again. "Next thing in the money the first time around an' out," he said to me. "And this event she will surely cop the purse."

But Orphan Annie disappointed him again, running third and just getting in the money by a cog. Twelve times she ran and still she did not break her maiden with a win. Yet there was no fault in him in his prize filly. Indeed, it is a peculiar thing; the more times she lost, the more confidence he had in her. And he keeps on grooming her to cop a kitty because, as it is now plain to be seen, he is in love with that horse and she certainly is in love with him.

When Orphan Annie is four years old, she is still only a also-ran and her racing record is had like the sands of other thoroughbreds who rarely get in the money. "It is breaking her heart," says Harry very serious, "and it is breaking mine, too."

Then Orphan Annie is entered in another maiden event like it seems for the thousandth time. And she always Harry is ready to bet his roll that she will come in first. But of course we have not taken him up because he has lost too much on Orphan Annie already. However, this time I and the boys surprise him by offering 3 to 1 that his bay filly will not win.

"I will take you chucks up on that," says Harry, cracking down his last grand.

"All right," I say, "if you are that foolish. But Orphan Annie cannot win this or any other race, so please do not make us laugh."

Modder McCrack and Beezer Bertie also give him the ha-ha family when he was sitting in the stand waiting for the maiden event. But do you think Harry will back down and admit that lodging from past performances we are right? Yes, not for all the thoroughbreds between here and Santa Anita.

"This is the time," he says, "that Orphan Annie is due to cop the purse positively. I have bet my last dollar on it with you chucks and I am not afraid at all worried."

And strange to relate Orphan Annie does win that race. And of course Harry is very jubilant. He collects three grand from us but the most important thing to him is that his prize bay filly has at last finished a race in front.

But then according very peculiar happens. And this is that after that race Orphan Annie will back run no more. We all of us try to make her, but every time we take her on the turf she goes berserk and bolts for her stall. Finally Harry makes us leave her alone because he states he has decided not to race Orphan Annie any more.

It is a great mystery to the boys and me that Orphan Annie positively will not run and that Harry holds that she will never race her again. For we have all kept our mouths tight right, so how it is that Harry find out that besides the three grand, we lose to him, it also cost us two thousand bucks more to let the race so Orphan Annie would surely come in first? And, besides, how could the boys know that she did not win on the level?

I know that these things are not possible. And that is why, as I look at Harry now sitting silent over his glass, I am still wondering.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE (Close)

Toronto, Aug. 10 (CP)—Weakness in the base metals and spotty strength in the golds and mining trials marked today's trade on the Toronto Stock Exchange. In a moderate run of profit-taking the senior base metals, including International Nickel, Smelters, Noranda and Hudson Bay, drifted downward by 3-4 to 1-8 and the cheaper issues posted proportionate losses. As prices eased down, turnover showed up in the group. Over the board the turnover was off from that of Monday.

Heavy trading at price advances of 4 to 5 points developed in Powell-Rouyn, Preston, Kerr-Addison, Lava Cap and Parbec Austin; these gains were sizeable losses for others, including Wright Hargreaves, O'Brien, Premier, Towagmac and Stadacona.

More than 3,000 shares of Wright Hargreaves were sold and O'Brien was offered in small lot after volume. Dome closed a little higher and its close was up for Macassa, Falconbridge, Central Patricia, Howey, MacLeod-Cockshutt, Moneta, San Antonio and Pioneer.

Closing prices were 20 to 30 cents down for Sturgeon Rives, Fred Orville, Reeves-MacDonald and Fab-combridge and recession of 5 to 10 cents appeared for Waite-Amulet, Sudbury Basin, Sherritt and Aldermac. Silvers were firm and Eldorado up about 15 cents and Nipissing down.

WALL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 10.—(AP)—Backwardness of steels and coppers tended to obscure selective recovery in other parts of today's stock market.

While prices generally were off near the final hour, selling was exceptionally light. A few utilities, motors, rubbers and specialties did fairly well in comparison with the rest of the list. Transfers were at the rate of about 700,000 shares.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

Market Comment

After the break of the past spring, the hope was held in many quarters that the stock market would stage a recovery during the summer. It was maintained at that time that business was sufficiently good to warrant a resumption of the bull market. The principal reason for the failure of stocks to move ahead can be attributed to the world-wide publicity given to our crop failure and the hoped-for summer advance did not develop.

Now it is maintained that the poor crops in Western Canada, while hurting business, will not prove of permanent seriousness and the good crops in Eastern Canada will in part counteract the drought conditions in the West insofar as industry is concerned. Consequently, the consensus is that a better market will prevail shortly after Labor Day when seasonal influences become noticeable.

With indications pointing to a record season for the tourist trade, some estimates exceeding the $300 million mark it is apparent that business throughout the Dominion has received a considerable impetus. The tourist business is Canada's second largest industry and one of the most lucrative and more effort should be expended to entice Americans to our doorstep.

Massey-Harris Preferred

The preferred shares of Massey-Harris are in arrears of dividends to the extent of $32.75 a share. It is very unlikely that these arrears will be liquidated in cash, indications being that a compromise arrangement will be sought providing for stock—either preferred or common, or both, being issued to preferred shareholders in lieu thereof.

In October of last year bondholders approved the waiving of sinking fund arrears on the bonds and a change in the sinking fund provisions. As compensation the company agreed that no dividends would be paid on the preferred stock until such time as an additional $2,000,000 of bonds have been redeemed.

The company, on its last balance sheet, showed a profit and loss deficit of $22,183,128 and cash and marketable securities of only $1,047,722 against bank loans of $1,136,236 and accrued taxes of $272,814. Current assets of $22,655,414 were largely composed of receivables and inventories, the former amounting to $10,226,802 and the latter to $10,984,580. The serious crop condition that has developed in Western Canada is bound to be keenly reflected in operations of the agricultural implement company, paving the way bound to curtail substantially both sales and collections.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Aug. 10 (CP)—Bacon hog prices were still rising today with golden sows large as 225 cents reported at Hull and Barrie on dressed weights. Liverweights were up 25 cents at Hull and 15 at Brantford.

Liveweights: Brantford $18.75; Chatham $18; Hull $19.25; Peterborough $18.50; London $18.50 Stratford $19.50.

Dressweights: Barrie $14.20; Chatham $13.90; Hull $14.35; Peterborough $13.90; Stratford $14; London $14.

IMMIGRATION RISES

Ottawa, Aug. 10 (CP)—Immigration to Canada increased 30 per cent in the first six months of 1937 it was reported today by the Department. The number of new Canadians was 6,627, compared with 5,250 in the corresponding period a year ago. Many of the immigrants were women and children, joining husbands and fathers who only now can afford to pay their way to Canada.

200 NON-STRIKERS ESCORTED INTO PLANTS

Thirty Policemen Guard Those Returning to Jobs; Picket Lines are Quiet

Girl Strikers Withdraw From Picket Lines as Escort Approaches

STRIKERS MEET

Gathering of Strikers Breaks up Without Plans

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 11—(CP)—Two hundred non-strikers were ushered into the two plants of Dominion Woolleng and Worsteds today without trouble. A squad of 30 policemen composed of the Provincial officers drawn from all sections of eastern and central Ontario and the city police guarded the workers who returned to work.

Picket lines opened and workers passed quietly through the lines. At the Bonner Werth mill 118 entered the plant while at the Auburn 79 were in the police escort. Many more are known to have followed the escort into the Auburn plant.

.....Girls Move Away

On the striking side, picket lines at the Auburn plant 54 and at the Bike number at the Bonner Worth mill. Auburn women, "ringsiders" of the mill and the ones who started the strike, still remain out and it is feared that if these do not return the company will have difficulty in operating the mill much longer than a week.

Girls who handled the police yesterday moved away from their picket lines today as soon as they saw the police approaching. Mrs. Archie Leader and 14 strikers flog court charges arising out of yesterday's disturbance.

Day After Blasting

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 11 —(CP)—Their leader in jail and 14 of their number facing charges, textile strikers today considered their next move as Dominion Woolens and Worsteds reopened for peace to continue operations in its two local plants.

Reopening of the units yesterday to break a seven-week strike brought a sudden flare of rioting and violence. Troubles centred at the Bonner Worth mill where the strikers put up spirited resistance. At the Auburn unit 77 striking workers went unmolested.

Rioting flared when 198 police escorted workers broke through picket lines to enter the Bonner Worth mill. Led by a woman picketing girls, the strikers attacked

State police and Wayne County sheriff's and prosecutor's offices arranged to have "every" on hand. The actual policing of the area rested with the City of Dearborn, where the industrial unit is located.

Why the Weather?

Science Service Meteorologist Sallee explains the weather: The loss of magic is full of stories of how the wind is controlled. Some sailors open the wind by tying it up in knots of thread, rope, or a handkerchief, and some simply put it into a bag or sack. They could then dispose of it at their convenience. The best wind story is told by Frazer, of the Fiji Islanders, whose wizards made a business of dealing with the wind. In the Gulf of Finland, when sailors see a gulp coming into the teeth of the wind with all sails set and really overhauling all those who are beating their way, they know that the magic ship is from Finland. These stories should not make us too conceited, for it was only a few centuries ago beliefs such as these were universal, and many today hold fast to illogical beliefs and customs.

MAIDEN VOYAGE GERMAN SEAPLANE STARTS SERVICE

Nordmeer on First Leg to Lisbon Then to Azores And New York

SERVICE NEXT YEAR

Plane Has Four 600 H.P. Diesel Engines And And Cruises 160 m.p.h.

Lubeck, Germany, Aug. 11 (AP)— The German seaplane Nordmeer took off for Lisbon at 7:30 a.m. (3:30 a.m. E.D.T.) today on the first leg of her maiden voyage to New York, preparing a role for future transatlantic air service linking Germany and North America.

The 16-ton flying ship roared into the air from this Baltic seaport and headed southwest for the Elbe River mouth, completed two most dangerous section of the journey because it is overland.

Flight Captain Hans Blanken-burg said he expected to make the first leg in about 13 hours.

From Lisbon the Nordmeer is scheduled to fly to the Azores where the Catapult ship Schwabenland is standing by to refuel and launch the plane flie the 2,300 miles to New York.

The flight is the first of eight trips scheduled this year across the Atlantic by the Nordmeer and her sister ship, the Nordwin, making Germany's opening bid for transatlantic passenger and freight service.

Few Within Taken

Only a handful of Lufthansa officials and army, navy and aviation officers were on hand to witness the takeoff, but the populace of Lubeck obfered and waved handkerchiefs as the huge ship roared over the town.

In addition to the crew of four, a German newspaperman was aboard the Nordmeer, which carried a liberal supply of mail, spare motor parts but no mail.

The plane, like its sister ship, is driven by four 600-horsepower Diesel engines with a cruising speed of 160 miles an hour, a top speed of 200 miles an hour and a cruising radius of more than 3,000 miles.

The planes are considered the sturdiest ever constructed in that many and in addition to electric controls, each has a small bed, for the crew to sleep in shifts.

Thirty Hour Trip

On future flights a land plane will accompany the seaplanes, transferring its cargo to the huge seaplanes at Lisbon. The entire run, including stops at Horta in the Azores and Frankfort-on-Main with New York, is expected to require 30 hours.

Germany is the third nation to begin transatlantic air service, with flights in the race to inaugurate regular service by next spring.

Already the United States Pan-American Airways and the British Imperial Airways have completed two round trips each on the northern route.

A further bid is planned by the French "Air France Trans-Atlantique" in 1938 with a specialized flying boat along the Lisbon-Azores route to New York sometime this summer.

Says 500 Nazis Informing On Germans in Great Britain

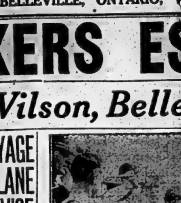
London Daily Herald Makes Charges on Expelled Men

MORE TO FOLLOW?

London, Aug. 11—(AP) —Great Britain was reported today by The Daily Herald to be completing expulsion of more Nazis in addition to three German correspondents already ordered to leave the country.

The three newspapermen were expelled, The Herald said, because they headed a Nazi organization that worked under control of the German Foreign Office. Daily information was sent to Berlin, the paper asserted, of social and political activities of friends of Germans living in England.

Two of the German correspondents, Frau Otto Wredy and Wolf Dietrich Langen, were employees of a German news agency specializing in news of Germans abroad. They have already left London.



The third, Werner von Crome, correspondent of the Berlin Lokalanzeiger planned to leave by this week-end.

Frau Wredy, The Herald said, "that the principal count against Langen was that he intimated his fellow countrymen to use them as informers."

An estimated 500 Nazis were said to be operating in Great Britain when headquarters, 30,000 Germans, including refugees, are resident.

The three correspondents were refused permission to stay in England by the Home Office, which would not renew their labor permits necessary for foreigners to work in England. The Herald asserted they had established their Nazi group in London following the Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939.

Zionist Congress Votes To Negotiate with Britain On Palestine Partition

Many of 462 Delegates Weep Before Vote is Taken at Zurich Assembly—No Authority Given to . . . . Say "Yes" or "No"

Zurich, Switzerland, Aug. 11—(AP)—The world Zionist congress voted today to negotiate with Great Britain on the royal commission's recommendations for the partition of Palestine. The vote was 304 to 159.

The vote does not authorize the executive officers of the world Zionists, to say "yes" or "no" to the royal commission report, but they may explore its pobibility and ascertain the exact terms of the proposal to partition the Holy Land into Jewish and Arab states.

Majority Resolution

Solomon Kaplansky of Palestine presented the majority resolution favoring negotiations with Great Britain, and added a supplementary resolution stating the congress "rejects the conclusion of the royal commission that national aspirations of the Jewish and Arab people in Palestine are irreconcilable."

The resolution attributed past troubles in Palestine to uncertainty as to the policy of the mandatory power.

The congress reaffirms its previous declarations expressing the readiness of the Jewish people to reach a peaceful settlement with the Arabs in Palestine, based on a free development of both races with mutual recognition of their respective rights," the resolution stated.

Opposition to negotiations was led by Rabbi Stephen Wise, formerly of Toronto and now of New York City, acting as "president of the Zionist Organization of America" ca, presented a minority resolution declaring irrevocable opposition to any partition in the Holy Land. The majority of the United States delegation voted against Wise, however.

"Weeping Before Vote"

Many of the 462 voting delegates wept as moved they were before the vote. Others applauded one of their number from Palestine who arose to tell them, in a shaking voice:

"Thousands of years of Jewish history are being crowded into this brief vote. Remember your duty."

In the voting, delegates who favored the majority report, which was adopted, responded with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, "Aleph" those backing the minority motion, opposing partition of Palestine, answered with the second letter, "Beth."

HIGHEST PRICE IN SEVEN YEARS

Hogs Bring High Price on Toronto Market Says Report

Toronto, Aug. 11—(CP)—Farmers are receiving higher prices on the Toronto market for prime hogs than at any time for seven years, a weekly parison of livestock figures showed today.

Last week Ontario farmers received more money for selling fever received for the same number a year ago.

For the week ending August 3, farmers sold Toronto Packers 50,091 hogs at an average price of $10.84 a hundred pounds. During the corresponding week a year ago, they sold 57,067 hogs at an average price of $9.59.

The increase in hog prices is due partly to the hog scarcity caused in the United States by drought-ridden shortage there, but has initiated his fellow countrymen to use them as informers."

An estimated 600 heads were said to be operating in Great Britain when headquarters, 30,000 Germans, including refugees, are resident.

The three correspondents were refused permission to stay in England by the Home Office, which would not renew their labor permits necessary for foreigners to work in England. The Herald asserted they had established their Nazi group in London following the Nazi-Soviet pact of 1939.

Posting a Letter Calls Out Firemen

Sudbury, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP)—When Ellwood Stephens of Spring Bay, Manitoulin Island, went to post a letter here he was amazed at the brilliant service provided in the city. It was his first visit to Sudbury and a stranger had pointed out the letter box.

As he stood there, letter in hand, a fire alarm beginning. There was a whirring of clockwork, a screeching of sirens and presently a red truck arrived on the scene. Stephens explained he wanted to mail a letter. A stranger had told him to pull the switch in the box.

"I'm sorry, I made a mistake," he told the firemen, shortly afterward a city police station where he was taken by members of the fire department to repeat his story.

NANKOW ON FIRE AS MAJOR BATTLE IS PROGRESSING

City Gateway From Hopeh To Province of Chahar

NEAR PEIPING

Japan Believes Chinese Army Command Wants War

Tokyo, Aug. 11—(AP)—Domei (Japanese) news agency reported tonight that a major engagement had developed between Chinese and Japanese troops at Nankow Pass, 30 miles northwest of Peiping. The Chinese city of Nankow is said to be in flames.

The city, on the great wall of China, is the gateway from the north China province of Hopeh to the Mongolian province of Chahar. Both Chinese and Japanese troops had been reported massing in the area after Japanese drove Chinese forces out of Langfang.

Dispatcher today said the Japanese encountered troops of the Central Chinese army along the Peiping-Suiyuan railway, which runs through Nankow. It was the first report that units of the central army forces have moved northward since the first Chinese-Japanese clash.

Japan Defeated Report

(Chinese reports at Peiping said the Japanese army was being defeated at Nankow Pass. Japanese reinforcements were said to be moving from Peiping to Nankow).

Blasting of a Japanese naval officer and seaman at Shanghai was characterized as having grave possibilities of a renewal of hostilities, the Japanese press said.

Japanese officials maintained they were anxious to settle the Shanghai clash through diplomatic channels, last to avert any step leading to a formally declared war and jeopardize their conques t of North China.

The slayings—Japanese charge Chinese guards fired on the two without provocation—were taken, however, as still another indication of the fundamental antagonism at the breach between the two powers.

JAPANESE ARMY REPORTED LOSING

Conquest of North China is Virtually Complete

Gly J. D. White, Associated Press Staff Correspondent

Peiping, Aug. 11 (AP)—Unconfirmed Chinese reports persisted here today that the Japanese army was being defeated in a major engagement at Nankow Pass, 30 miles northwest of here on the Peiping-Chahar-Suiyuan railway.

It was just west of Nankow that Chinese reported yesterday a decisive defeat of Japanese forces in force their way into Shahar Province had been annihilated. Shortly afterwards columns of Japanese troops began moving to the northwest in the direction of the pass. Here they were completely mechanized and included commanders of tanks.

Japanese declared there was fighting near the Great Wall Pass but Chinese said there was merely light skirmishing and that the Japanese drive could be expected for at least two weeks.

Her military conquest of North China is virtually complete. Japan has turned her attention to reconstructing South China's shattered positions, destroying thousands of Chinese troops and capturing Japanese. Chinese assert that all incoming mail is being censored and that the majority of domestic mail is being held up.

'Oh Boy! I Go to Akron' Smiles Local Youngster As Thousands Acclaim

Drives Car No. 13 to Three Heat Victory Over Classy Field

NOT NERVOUS

Will Compete at Akron, Ohio, For North American Title

George Wilson, twelve year old son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Wilson of 111 Chatham Street, Belleville, is the newly crowned Canadian Soap Box Champion.

Piloting his dull grey kid kar, the one which won the race held here on Dominion Day, the Belleville youth flashed across the finish line at the Soap Box Derby held in Toronto yesterday under the auspices of the Danforth Business Men's Club, with the cream of Toronto drivers trailing in his wake. Two out of three victories in the series which go to the winner and the title of Canadian champion, but he also won the right to represent Canada at the National Soap Box Derby to be held in Akron, Ohio next month. All expenses of the youngster will be paid. As an international race, the winner of which will be presented with a four year scholarship in any university.

Drove Clever Race

Ten thousand people roared their acclaim as the diminutive Belleville youth, in his dull grey kid racing car, trailed his two competitors on the final lap of the first of the five hundred yard course. Near the halfway mark, the Belleville car picked up a few yards on his speeding opponents. Topping a slight rise in the course, the racing car with its driver driving a confident grin over level with the second car. Gathering momentum, Wilson flashed past the second place car and gradually overtaking the leading racer, and took first place amid seventy yards from the finish. Ten thousand people stood and cheered as the car crossed the finish line, five yards in the lead, the Belleville youngster hanging grimly to the wheel and driving his car. His lead gradually increased and he roared over the finish a winner by five yards, and a new Canadian champion.

A second later, Griffith Jackson, Toronto, and Tom Burley, Toronto, were across the line in that order and third in the order named.

Surrounded by Crowd

Surrounded by a crowd of admiring drivers, the diminutive Belleville winner was escorted to the Dominion Day Park Arrow Park where in conjunction with the Toronto celebrations the classes he was presented with a cup by His Worship Mayor W. D. Robbins of Toronto. Wilson received a beautiful trophy emblematic of the Canadian championship, a gold medal, a twenty-two calibre rifle and the trip to Akron, O.

Law Not Arms Is Way of Peace

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP)—Development of the United States indicates the way by which world peace may be secured, Rev. Leyton Richards, Birmingham, England, told the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics at Geneva Park today.

The League of Nations exists as a practical political experiment which "is legally supported by the signatory nations, could do for the world what the Congress and the Supreme Court have done for the States do for the American union, he said.

Organization of the world on a federal basis would mean international law of which it may be contended. An international army to enforce the decisions of courts would be the next phase in the evolution of international relationships.

Young Champ Reticent on Winning Ride

He's a cool youngster, is this four-foot eighty-five pound George Wilson newly crowned Canadian Soap Box Derby Champion. With a proud mother her eyes fairly gleaming with pride and adoration for the young champion, in his wake, this handsome boy strode into the Ontario Intelligencer shortly after noon today. Close behind him, tightly clutching the beautiful silver trophy emblematic of the Canadian title came a younger brother.

Both boys seemed more interested in the inner workings of the editorial room of a newspaper than they did in the fact, that one of them was a hero. They strolled around gazing at teletype machines placing exploratory fingers on the keyboards of typewriters and looking at maps of the various parts of the world. The fact that George had won the race yesterday and all the honors that go with it matter-of-fact-like apparently to the youthful winner.

In fact he didn't want to talk very much about his exploits. He answered questions generally with a "yes" or a "no", but occasionally his snapping dark eyes gleamed with a deeper light when a question of importance was asked him.

Read a Thrill

"What was the greatest thrill you had?" he was asked. George slowly turned a piece of copy paper over, looked around the room and answered: "In that final heat. Gee, those fellas had a good start on me and I had to get over and top of the hill the old bus fairly scooted ahead. I passed 'em, and that's all there was to it."

"Are you say anything after the race?"

"No, I mean yes. They took me into the dressing room and I guess I said something to them but I thought it was a fair race and I was glad that I won."

"How do you like the idea of going to Akron?"

"Awright", relied this remarkable youngster.

"Would you like to beat the American boys?" Dark eyes twinkled at this question. "Say we would I. And I am going to do my best to do that," he answered.

Mrs. Wilson intervened at this point. "Do you know," she said, "that George had the colors of the Danforth Business Men's Club sewed on his shirt. He insisted on that before the race. So they were presented to him in Toronto there. But I told them they

CLEARING DEBRIS AFTER HEAVY RAIN

Left in Wake of Season's Heaviest Rain Storm

Extra gangs of workers employed by the city department of public works commenced this morning the task of clearing the silt and debris, principally from the downtown section, left in the wake of last night's heaviest rain storm last evening.

With sidewalks running over with the heavy fall of water when deposited in sheets, overworked sewers refused to function, Minutes lakes formed on the intersections of the principal thoroughfares, drivers with floating wreckage left by the tide.

In the rural areas of the city grain crops and corn felt the impact of the pounding rain, though damage, it was reported will be generally light.

Today the highest humidity of the year was probably registered for this section, dripping in its intensity more than the thickness citizens the acme of discomfort in busy shops and offices.

No Propaganda in Schools, Deputy Minister Warns

McArthur Says Training, Inspiration, Thirst For Truth Aim

NO PLACE FOR 'ISMS'

Toronto, Aug. 11 (CP)—The situation might arise that demands be made to use Canadian schools for political propaganda as in certain European countries, Dr. Duncan McArthur, Ontario Deputy Minister of Education, warned the Canadian Teachers' Federation at a dinner here last night.

It is not the function of the school to 'indoctrinate any theory of 'ism' whatever, however one might agree' he told delegates to the Teachers' annual convention. The school will have discharged its responsibility when it trains boys and girls to think clearly, accurately and consistently, and sends them out with an unquenchable thirst for truth and stimulates their curiosity in regard to the life about them."

RAIN DISLODGES LOOSE ROCK WALL

Fall of Tons of Rock on Lawn Startles Resident

Tons of rock dislodged by the seepage of water following the torrential rain last night crashed down on the lawn of Dr. J. J. Robertson, Pinnacle Street, destroyed flower beds and shrubs and a large area of lawn when a loose rock wall some twenty feet in height gave way. The wall which is seven feet in depth at its base and three feet at its top was built of loose flat stone measuring some twelve by twenty inches in diameter.

Rain water flowing from the high land to the rear of the Robertson property washed away the earth at the rear of the top of the wall, loosening the stones and causing them to crash to the ground twenty feet below. The wall was broken away to a height of five feet from the ground. Large stones and piles of earth dislodged and the wall kept lawn, completely effacing beautiful flower beds planted near the base of the wall.

Seen this morning, Dr. Robertson stated that he was awakened by a terrific crash. "I thought at first it was an earthquake", he said.

Los Angeles, Aug. 11—(AP)—Police jailed Theodore Waite, 36, early today on suspicion of throwing an empty liquor bottle that endangered Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler, singer and actress, and slightly cut Chico Marx when it crashed through the Olympic Auditorium boxing ring.

The bottle crashed over the heads of ringsiders in the seventh round of the main event, between old George Godfrey, negro heavyweight of Leipersville, Pa., and Hank Hankinson, Akron, O.

Second Sixth Scene

Another storm scene was enacted at the Bonner Worth plant as the workers left under police protection at five o'clock last night. The crowd included scores of strikers who booed and jeered, but the main attention was made up of curious onlookers.

At McDonald Hill and Park streets near the plant, the crowd became so dense and unmanageable police called a taxi and escorted the disperse them. No arrests were made as a result of the second demonstration.

Policemen in Readiness

Twenty Provincial policemen were assembled in preparation for the plant opening and were still held at the call of municipal authorities when they departed. Continued protection for any employees who wished to go back to work.

The management reopened both plants as part of a settlement proposal which also included the Ontario government's founding of an industry and labor board to apply into textile wage schedules. The company agreed that any order the board might make would be effective as of the date of the strikers returned.

'A Heartache' Says Hepburn

At Tromio Premier Hepburn said it was a "heartache" for him to hear of the rioting" and that my fellow-citizens are so deluded as to resort to violence and lawlessness while a problem that can only be solved by a spirit of common sense and wholesome goodwill."

The strikers held a poorly attended, futile meeting last night. With organizer Welch in jail and without Michael English, chairman of the strike committee, who arrested but later released, they came to no decision and soon broke up without making plans as to the continuance or dropping of the strike.

PROVINCE WINNING WAR ON DISEASES

Venereal Disease Total Reduced to One Per Cent Says Doctor

"Social diseases of a certain nature are not a hopeless problem. There is no reason why they cannot be eliminated like smallpox or diphtheria," Dr. A. L. McKay of the Ontario Department of Health, Toronto, told the Kiwanis Club at the regular weekly luncheon held in the Queens Hotel yesterday. Dr. McKay, who substituted for the Hon. J. A. Faulkner, gave his listeners an insight into the problem, the ravages, the remedies used years ago and those now in vogue and with the splendid strides being made by medical science in the elimination of these dread diseases.

"These diseases of the venereal type have been with us for centuries", Dr. MacKay stated, "and they were of a devastating nature in the earlier days." The speaker gave a detailed account of the spread of these diseases throughout the world and the problems here in Ontario, in combatting the scourge.

"Clinics have been established in the principal cities", he said, "but not in every city. The Venereal disease prevention act was not a popular Public Health precedent. There were many municipalities which objected to the issue when asked to look after this problem. To aid these we cut down the payments to the clinics and with the money saved we reimbursed the municipalities with clinics".

Surgeon General Thomas Parran, of the United States struck the right note then he said that combatting these disease is not a question of mixed morals but rather of communicable disease control."

New Experiments

Turning to the situation here in Ontario the speaker pointed out that "the authorities here feel that a very important point is treating these already infected and looking for those who are infected and do not know it."

"In Ontario", he said, "every case is treated until it is non-infectious. New experiments are being made with the drugs and much progress is being made. We feel here that we have kept pace with the diseases and in some cases have reduced the danger. If the proper facilities are provided and the public informed of the early symptoms the cases can then be eliminated at the source of infection."

"Here in Ontario about one per cent of the population is infected with the social diseases. This is a great improvement over the four and five per cent. which prevailed some years ago. At that 37.6 approximately ten million people are infected."

These diseases have been prevalent in every nations, yes, and in women's institutions the rate has been higher than that of the men, for the reason that they were submitted for sexual disease. The statement sometimes heard that eighty per cent. of the inmates of our mental hospitals and asylums suffer from these diseases is not true. Of 14,000 patients only five or six per cent. are there for reasons of this nature."

"We in Ontario are doing better. We are making marked headway with these diseases. It is not a hopeless problem," Dr. McKay concluded.

The semi-finals saw him drive his car a winner over Neil Metcalfe of John Outlaw, also of Toronto. The finals saw his speed and skill matched with the best drivers of the other heats. Following the final heat Bill Wilson, Neil Metcalfe and Robert Chapman, all of Toronto raced again to decide fourth, fifth and sixth places.

JAPANESE FORCES SUFFER CASUALTIES DURING ADVANCE

While Japanese troops have succeeded in forcing their way into northern China at Peiping and Tientsin, their conquest has not been without some casualties. The charred skeleton of a Japanese military truck is the upper left photograph marks the spot of where a force of Japanese soldiers was ambushed and wiped out by the Chinese near the Yungting Men Gate when its driver pulled his steel helmet over his eyes to protect them from the blinding dust of the city walls and was one of the minor skirmishes that preceded taking over of the city by Japanese invaders. The photograph at the lower left was also taken at Peiping and may be chalked up to the credit of the Chinese who resisted the Japanese drive. This artillery truck, loaded with repair equipment, smashed into a tree when its driver pulled his steel helmet over his eyes to protect them from the blinding dust of the city walls and against Chinese rifle fire. A Japanese tank lowed the wreck away next day. At the lower right are Japanese bluejackets searching a Chinaman at Shanghai after one Japanese bluejacket had been reported kidnapped by a group of Chinese. The missing sailor was not expected to be found under the rickshaw seat, but the effect on Chinese at the city was planned to be impressive.

Cranck, shown above, as he rested in bed at the home of a friend, had no fear of the bush, for he had lived on bark and leaves during his wanderings. Though the man can remember nothing, he believes that a stroke is to blame for his stumbling blindly through the woods and unable to find shelter. During the days he was missing Cranck lost 30 pounds bringing his weight to here 78 lbs. Doctors are confident he will recover.

NO NEGLIGENCE JURY VERDICT

Mannon Jones, son of the deceased, told the court, his father and he were proceeding across the Bay in a car, and when in Prince Edward County, a puncture of a tire occurred his father started to walk back to town and that is the last time he saw him alive. Orley Parks, driver of the car, stated the man stepped directly into the path of his machine as he was proceeding south, following another car. He believed the man stepped out into the highway from behind the front car directly in the path of his vehicle. "I did not see the man until the car hit him", the witness stated. Garth Reid, a passenger in the Parks' car corroborated the driver's story. Provincial traffic officer, gave evidence stating that the brakes on the vehicle were in excellent condition and the car in first class mechanical condition. Constable Harry Boddy also gave evidence with respect to the investigation which he made and did not hold the driver at the time of the accident.

GRIMM NOT DISMAYED BY LOSS OF COLLINS

(By William Weekes)

Chicago, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Their star first baseman, Zeke (Ripper) Collins, was in the dryclock with a broken ankle—the 11th victim in a decade to grasp the extended hand of Adolf Hitler, of Germany, when Der Fuehrer visited the scene. Hitler's pleasure at the cordial greeting from Americans is reflected in his beaming smile.

Delegates from San Francisco, California, to the singing festival at Stuttgart, Germany, crowd to the dais to grasp the extended hand of Adolf Hitler, of Germany, when Der Fuehrer visited the scene. Hitler's pleasure at the cordial greeting from Americans is reflected in his beaming smile.

Collins, acquired fast fall to repair the only weak spot in the infield, went out of action yesterday in the opening game of the series with the Pittsburgh Pirates, when a bone in his right ankle cracked as he attempted to slide home in the first inning.

But neither Grimm nor any other member of the team could see the blow interfering with their hopes of getting into the World Series.

"Sure, it's tough wallop losing a ball player like Collins," Grimm growled, but we had seven games down at once at the start of the season and it didn't bother us from staying right in there until they got back.

"Now, we've got a six-game, lead to work with, and we aren't going to let that worry us a bothing a bathing. Every man on the clubs feels that way. "The doctor says Jim will be able to move around in three weeks, and we probably will have him back in the first base for the last month of the season."

Collins' loss ends with Pitchers Bill Lee and Charley Root, Shortstop Bill Jurges out with injuries, all more or less serious.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

"Wee Willie Winkie" Held Over Thursday and Friday

"Wee Willie Winkie" has broken all-time attendance records at the Belle Theatre and has been retained by popular demand the picture will be held over Thursday and Friday.

This is Shirley Temple's best picture to date, although many people will feel that it is a pretty high compliment.

However, this film is head and shoulders above anything that Shirley has appeared in before, not only in regard to her own performance, but in regard to story, production, and cast.

Taken from Rudyard Kipling's widely-read story of India's Khyber Pass, 20th Century-Fox have made a fortune on this picture, have had the story rewritten to suit Shirley Temple and then have starred little Shirley, as it were to suit Kipling's story. By that I mean, that the Shirley Temple of "Wee Willie Winkie" is an entirely different Shirley than the cute little youngster, we have been used to seeing. She imitates nobody, she does no singing, and she only sings one song, "Auld Lang Syne," and that is over Victor McLaglen's dead body. In other words, in "Wee Willie Winkie," Shirley blossoms out as a dramatic actress and she handles her role in brilliant fashion, promising that she will retain her position as the screen's best box-office attraction for several years more anyway.

A war — "Wee Willie Winkie" Shirley Temple's picture excitingly. Actually she is co-starred with Victor McLaglen's dead body. C. Aubrey Smith as Shirley's stern soldier grandfather, is given considerable footage, and he once more proves what a grand old actor he really is. The scene where he climbs the steps leading to the enemy's stronghold, with shots whizzing past his ears, is a masterpiece. Cesar Romero as the villian who turns Shirley's excellent work. Michael Whalen and June Lang satisfactorily supply the love interest. In this picture, Miss Shirley has a leading man, in the person of Victor McLaglen, who gulped attention for his portrayal of the young Nelson, in "Lloyd's of London." It will be interesting to see if this innovation is followed through in the later Shirley Temple pictures.

The film is directed by John Ford, who won the Academy Award for his direction of McLaglen in "The Informer," a couple of years ago. His megging is first class, on many occasions rising to sheer brilliance.

There is no doubt but that "Wee Willie Winkie" will keep Shirley Temple as an even bigger box office draw, and screen lovers may head the list of 20th Century Fox five-year record at the Roxy Theatre in New York.

Coronation in Color

A special extra attraction on the same program tonight, Thursday and Friday, matinee daily is the Coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. decked procession route.....in most glorious spectacle the world has ever seen.....in all its true and thrilling splendor. A funny Mickey Mouse cartoon, "The Worm Turns" precedes the Color Coronation picture.

Performances start daily at 2.30, 7.00 and 9.15. "Wee Willie Winkie" starts today, Thursday and Friday at 3.10, 7.35 and 9.50. The Coronation film in color at 2.40, 7.10 and 9.30 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Crack-Up" and "Michael O'Halloran"

A powerful, fast-paced, thrill-filled melodrama of daring American flyers matching wits and courage with an international spy ring, "Crack-Up," now playing the Capitol as bill No.1 maintains its suspense from the opening scene right to the exciting and tensely dramatic climax.

A giant airship-is being christened by Ralph Morgan, its manufacturer, Brian Donlevy, ace flyer who will pilot it, Thomas Beck, his co-pilot, and Peter Lorre, crippled half-wit and mascot of the airfield. Donlevy, the hired tool of a spy ring, tells Beck, who idolizes him, that the manufacturer for whom Beck is employed, Morgan, is secretly has stolen the plans of a propeller from him.

Enraged at this seeming injustice, Beck visits Morgan that night at her office and, without her knowledge, steals the plans from her files. Morgan learns that his wife loves his partner. Heartbroken, he hops off at midnight on a Trans-Atlantic flight with Donlevy and Beck. Early the following day the plans are missed. After questioning Helen, investigators are certain the plans are on the plane Lorre, a stowaway on the plane appears and says he is the spy to whom Donlevy was to sell the plans. Over the radio comes a frantic message from Helen to Beck, telling him that he has been tricked.

Beck tries to kill Donlevy, just as the plane crashes in mid-ocean. Lorre joins in the savage fight for the plans, but Beck gets them. Then as a liner is sighted from the rapidly sinking plane. Subsequent scenes, built up to a terrific and wholly unexpected climax that will have the spectators on the edges of their seats.

"Michael O'Halloran"

"Michael O'Halloran," now playing as bit No.2 at the Capitol is a production anticipated with great enthusiasm by local theatre goers. Republic has budgeted much time and money to make it an adaptation worthy of the Gene Stratton-Porter original, and from advance reports, their efforts have been well spent.

Readers of the delightful novel will recall that it deals with the power of a small boy to regenerate his foster parents and bring happiness and contentment to everyone whom his life touches.

Jack Kirkwood takes the part of the orphan waif, and Charlene Wyatt effectively portrays his little foster-child sister. These two youngsters sprang into sudden prominence in the Jewel Theatre team in "Valiant Is The Word For Carrie."

Wynne Gibson, a long time favorite, is cast as the thoughtless giddy mother who thinks only of her own pleasure until her love is put to the test. Sidney Blackmer is her husband. The long suffering Jim who at last has to resort to separation and divorce. Hope Manning and Warren Hull take the second lead.

NANKOW ON FIRE

Chinese Ready For War

That, added to two disquieting reports from China, was believed to indicate the intention of the Chinese Government to wage war. The reports were:

1.—That Chiang Kai-Shek, the Chinese Premier and Army Commander, has completed his preparations for hostilities and is ready to attack Peiping and Tientsin in an effort to recapture them from the Japanese army.

2.—The Central Government of China is prepared to move its capital from Nanking to Hankow for greater safety and has already made final arrangements for the transfer.

Gen. Chiang was said here to be completing the movement of Chinese troops to the north. This movement has been going on since the first clash over the rich North China region occurred on July 7th and was considered as evidence of his intention to recapture Peiping and Tientsin. The two North China cities lost to the Japanese army in the first engagement.

Chinese Evacuate Nanking

Simultaneously, thousands of Japanese are arriving from China. Japanese have evacuated practically all the large cities of China except Shanghai and Tsingtao. This evacuation, particularly that of the Yangtze River ports, means an annual loss to Japan of $60,000,000, according to the newspaper Asahi. Seventy per cent of Japan's trade with China was said to have centered along the Yangtze.

The paper added, Japan was facing its greatest loss in the Russian sphere, where millions of dollars invested in China in the form of industrial plants, cotton mills and steamship lines.

W. H. MORTON, PUBLISHER

THE PORT OF LEITH

Leith, an integral of the Scotch capital since 1920, for which it is the port of entry and departure, keeps itself before the world of commerce. There has just been issued a book by the Leith Chamber of Commerce on the activities of this port of Edinburgh. This ancient port dates from long before the time of King David First of Scotland who lived in 1124. Its early history was that of a tributary state under the suzerainty of Edinburgh, the independence of the port keeping it apart for many generations. It became in 1833 a separate and independent magistracy which ended only in 1920 when its independence was lost in the Greater Edinburgh.

It has figured in many historic and momentous events and lives in the history of Scotland. It is connected with the history of its rulers and its leaders. Its playgrounds are reminiscent of glorious events. "The Links" is one of the breathing places of the modern industrial population of Leith.

The purpose of the book is to indicate its greatness in the commerce of the world. It is on the most sheltered estruary on the British coast, the Firth of Forth. At Leith the Firth of Forth is five miles wide and provides ample room for development of commerce. Leith is at a pivotal point in Europe. Over three millions of tons of foodstuffs pass, raw materials and manufactured goods are seaborne through the port annually. The port is well provided with railway approaches and the new highway system of Scotland.

The book contains many details of great interest to the importing and exporting world and aims at placing Leith before the trading world in its true importance.

WEATHER AS NEWS

There are times when the weather makes good news. When it is ideal there is little need felt for announcing its attractions, but when it is intensely cold or intensely hot it finds its way into the newspapers because it is unusual. Then the change in winter from a cold spell to a less frigid one and in summer from a drought condition or from lengthy siege of humidity with intense heat.

Yesterday's rainstorm deserves a place of honorable mention as excellent news. The reporter liked to write on the old familiar theme of nature and her ways, the heading writer liked to dress it up in a heading and give it prominence and the reader liked to be told how pleasing was the change.

While water runs, spring returns, summer comes and winter passes away there will be this eternal interest in nature's ways. Man is so dependent in every material and physical way for himself and the race in nature that it is no wonder he returns to think of her again and again, especially when she gets out of the placid and expected moods.

CHANNEL SWIMMERS

Twenty-two persons who have swum the English Channel, which before its accomplishment was considered almost one of the wonders of the world, have made it of little news. Thomas Blower, a Nottingham worker, is the latest accomplisher who crossed from Cape Gris Nez to near Dover in thirteen hours and twenty-nine minutes in the face of cross-currents.

Though it is sixty-two years ago since Captain Webb swam the channel from Dover to Sangatte Beach, France, it is only within recent years that the feat was duplicated by Thomas Burgess, in 1911. It is not so many years ago that the channel attempts were much like so many oceanic flights today. Since then interest has died down. Blower's success received much less comment and notoriety than it would have had he appeared ten or twenty years ago.

Many good swimmers have failed to cross the channel and some persons without any heralding have crossed. One man only has crossed both ways, E. H. Temme.

Not the water but the air seems today to make the news. Front page news of the aerial variety is so much more intriguing than the slow test of endurance. Man knows how he can swim, but his ultimate in accomplishment in the air with the aid of invention no one can put a limit to. Hence it is no wonder that the aviator attracts more attention. Then too the aeronaut runs greater risk, he takes his life in his hand as he flits out over the almost limitless waters, limitless certainly as far as aid generally is in the event of a mishap.

STANZAS

Where forlorn sunsets flare and fade
On desolate sea and lonely sand,
Out of the silence and the shade
What is the voice of strange command
Calling you still, as friend calls friend
With love that cannot brook delay,
To rise and follow the ways that wend
Over the hills and far away?

Hark to the city, street on street
A roaring reach of death and life,
Of vortices that clash and fleet
And ruin in appointed strife;
Hark to it calling, calling clear,
Calling until you cannot stay,
From dearer things that you own most dear
Over the hills and far away.

Out of the sound of the ebb and flow,
Out of the sight of lamp and star,
It calls you where the good winds blow
And the unchanging meadows are;
From faded hopes and hopes agleam
It calls you, calls you night and day
Beyond the dark, into the dream
Over the hills and far away.

THERE DOES NOT SEEM TO BE A VERY CLOSE CONNECTION BETWEEN NECKTIES AND PRINTING but the editor of the Trenton Courier Advocate links up the two in a discussion of printing salesmen from other places hawking their wares in the home field at cut prices. There is a great deal of truth in what the Trenton editor says and it is remarkable that citizens apparently proud of their home community should throw stones at local industry by sending work out of town which can just as well be done at home, or better. Considering the investment in local printing plants, the wage earners who depend upon that industry and the merchants who depend upon the wagearners in every local industry one would think that outsiders would have hard work getting a hearing, let alone get orders. The first question should be where will this be printed if I give you the order? Loyalty begins at home and a community is just as great as its citizens make it. However, here's the Trenton editor's remarks about neckties and printing, in part:

"Not long ago there was much ado in this town because some person was caught peddling neckties without first obtaining permission in the matter of a license.

The culprit was taken before the cadi and he was ordered to pay a small fine and costa which was quite sufficient for the breach of the by-laws. But.

How many times have the police of this town ever picked up printers (?) that brought the necktie salesmen to court. It is safe to say that the printers of this town pay more taxes, more wages a week, and possibly spend more money in this tohn than all the sellers of nécktties in this town put together and yet we have absolutely no protection, no friends at court.

What is food for the goose should be sauce for the gander in this or any other man's town. If there is a law that prevents the peddling of neckties, there should be a law to prevent the peddling of printing. Further than this the printers should have more protection because their work is done in Trenton, while we know that the purveyors of neckties could not make a necktie to save their lives.

The printers of Trenton, the printers of the whole Bay of Quinte area, north side we mean, should be permitted to do the work of their respective communities and they should be protected against sweatshops, that the quality of work produced hereabouts is any lower in standard than that peddled from business place to business place in this town by outsiders who have no more licence to peddle printing than have the peddlers of Neckties."

GIRL PICKETS AND POLICE CLASH AT PETERBO RO PLANT

Screaming girl pickets and police officers clashed at Peterboro as officers cleared a path into the Bonner-Worth plant of the Dominion Woolens and Textiles Ltd., to allow non-striking employees to enter the plant. This photograph shows a police officer helping an injured striker to his feet after another officer is alleged to have broken his billy over the man's head. Premier Hepburn had informed the 750 textile strikers the new Ontario Industry and Labor Board would start a thorough investigation of their grievances following their return to work.

He looked at her closely as he came in, but said nothing. Walking to the little table by the window he pulsed on his hat, took his pipe from his pocket and put it between his teeth unlighted, then, nervously, he returned to the table again.

"Look her, Judith," he said suddenly, "you couldn't have meant what you said this noon."

"I did mean it though. Her eyes met his unflinchingly.

"Then you haven't changed your mood?" He reached for his hat. "And if you haven't changed your mood there's no use in my trying to talk this out with you now."

"It isn't a mood, Steve—and it isn't a question of talking it out. I told you today how I felt." She took a step toward him, then stopped as if afraid of herself. "Oh, Steve, I haven't insisted many times that I was right. In all the times we've quarrelled I've always given in. But this time I'm not going to give in. That's what makes me feel so sure I'm right."

Steve's laugh was without humor. "Right?" How can you be so absurd, Judith? You want me to marry you, support you, when I don't feel that way myself. It's not fair to myself."

"I want you to marry me, Stephen. I'll support myself. I want you that way. Doesn't that make it right?"

He shook his head. "Judith, I love you, more than anything else in the world. But I'm not going to let it blind me to the fact that I mustn't try to have what I've no right to have. Can't you understand that?"

Judith's shoulders sagged. Her mouth twisted in a smile of hopelessness. "Steve, all I know is that I love you. The young people we're in love. That's all there is to know or understand. We won't be young always. We haven't time to not love each other forever. But today is now. We have to think of now, her trembling hands against his shoulders. "Steve, you must stand that, Stephen! Today is ours and you want us to keep planning for it. Another day will be tomorrow."

He looked down at her, not speaking. Judith thought: If he kisses me now it's all right.

"That's the logic of a woman," Steve was saying. "But money's made in the world today and it takes money for a happy marriage. I'd be twenty-five in a few days and it your way, Judith."

His arm was around her shoulder, and his head bent closer. "Judith, if you'd only believe that I know what I'm talking about. It's your own happiness I'm thinking of, dear."

There were three sharp raps on the door, and Virginia Bent's scrill "Open up in there! It's the home detective!"

CHAPTER III.

At the sound of Virginia's voice, Judith, and Steve sprang apart.

"Damn!" said Steve in a low voice. "And I hadn't chosen this time to come properly to you and skip along, Judith. I can see you tomorrow."

Judith turned in the hallway. "There's no need to run—unless, away, Steve. Please stay a little while."

Stephen stayed, finding it impossible to do anything else. Into the little living room, as if on a crest of a typhoon, came Bob and Virginia Bent—with Toby Lynch.

Bob, jubilant, exclaimed: Toby extending his hand. Without enthusiasm Steve shook hands with him, returning his greeting with an unenthusiastic: "How are you, Toby?" The two were as unlike as possible. Steve Fowler was tall and solid and dark, with a lean, small, always rotund, and apparently had never known a strenuous train of thought in his life. Yet, mysteriously and unaccountably, he was a wife's favorite all over the world quite as well as Steve.

Virginia, after a glance toward Judith. "You and Steve didn't plan on seeing us tonight, did you, though we'd just drop in for a five-cornered chat. That thing Bob is holding is a bottle of cocktails, dear. It's a bottle of cocktails. And what cocktails mentioned Toby. "The Bent Special!"

With an effort Judith tried to project herself into a lighter mood. She held out her hand for Bob's container of cocktails, and put them in the refrigerator a while. "There are glasses on the shelf in the little table there."

Steve followed her into the kitchenette. "What's the idea of encouraging them to stay?" he whispered. "You know I wanted to talk to you."

Judith looking at him, she opened the refrigerator door and set the bottle of cocktails against the icy shelves. "I can't send them away, can she said quietly. "And I think everything was clear, wasn't it, Steve?"

"You mean we're finished?"

"Why, before they came?"

"You mean we're finished?"

"I mean we're friends. And that's all."

Steve was about to speak when Toby's raucous voice carried into the kitchenette. "If you two don't get away from there with reference ice cocktails will have no chance at all to chill!"

X X X

Resignedly, Steve returned with Judith to the other room. He looked at Toby, his eyes clouded with ill concealed contempt. He had disliked him at first sight, and now he liked him even less now. More than ever he was convinced that Judith that she should have nothing to do with him.

"But he's perfectly harmless," Judith always defended. "And he's Bob's—so what can we do?"

Steve had said nothing to Judith about the story that was drifting around. It was one of those stories that no man will like to hear about women of his acquaintance, no matter how much he may be antagonist of the story. Toby Lynch had promised to have persuaded a girl to share his apartment with him in lieu of marriage. Part of the story was that they were very much in love, and unable to marry because of his father's opposition to the matter in Steve Fowler's mind. He had never seen Toby Lynch in the company of a girl, young or old, and this lent credence to the story Toby had told of the girl's name, a congenial soul who, under ordinary circumstances, would have been a escort wherever he went. Steve had never discussed the story with Judith, but he had heard it repeated, drifting from one to another, with the usual derogatory propositions with each new telling.

If Steve looked at Toby now, it question mark in his eyes, it was the time they had known Toby, Toby had never been a guest in his apartment? He had visited the Steve Fowlers frequently, and often like this, he would join them in a visit to Judith and Steve. Yet that had never been invited to be Toby's guest. Indeed, not even Bob Bent knew just where Toby Lynch lived.

The conversation chilled a little by Steve's silence and Judith's nervous preoccupation, went rather briskly. Finally, the cocktails were sent to the kitchenette and consumed. With a cocktail to have warmed the loquacious Toby into a running fire of comment, and Virginia Bent into a chatty hostess. But Steve drank little, and Judith ate less than that, so one cock call.

Yet Virginia made no move to leave, and Judith realized that she intended to keep herself and Toby and Bob there—with Toby Lynch.

Bob, jubilant, exclaimed: Toby extending his hand. Without enthusiasm Steve shook hands with him, returning his greeting with an unenthusiastic: "How are you, Toby?" The two were as unlike as possible. Steve Fowler was tall and solid and dark, with a lean, small, always rotund, and apparently had never known a strenuous train of thought in his life. With an effort Judith tried to really be filled by the average single girl looking for a job. Let's take Virginia and myself as an example. Suppose I hadn't married Bob. How'd he wanting a job just as she is now. So what difference does it make to the girl's employment situation whether we're married or unmarried? No, Steve, you're just trying to work up a logical, economic argument to justify your pride."

Steve smiled slowly. "Maybe so."

X X X

Well, put in Toby, twisting impatiently in his chair, "I'd even go one step further than Bob."

"What do you mean?" asked Steve raising his head.

"Bob and Virginia took a big chance when they married."

"With due respect to Bob, I don't see that they did," Steve argued. "Both have jobs. Either job would probably support the two of them. If one of them were not willing to make sacrifices. I can't see that they took any chance at all."

X X X

"You're wrong Steve," said Toby, rising and walking toward the box of cigarettes on the little table. Carefully he took one up, then replaced it. "Suppose I told you that people want—what they really have. Suppose Bob and Virginia had wanted to marry only because it looked as if they couldn't? Then they wouldn't have had to make the wrong move. That would have been bad, wasn't it?"

"I'm afraid I'm not following you very well," Steve said.

"Perhaps I have an sensible solution to the problem of two people who love each other," Toby answered monotonously. "Toby Lynch went into the single girl's apartment together split all expenses. Then when business revived a little, they could get a little much in love, and unable to marry because of his father's opposition to the matter in Steve Fowler's mind. He would never see Toby Lynch in the company of a girl. Fashion Flashes

EASY TO LOOK at and charming to wear is an evening ensemble of white crepe romaine with plain red bodice and brief bolero. On either side of the bolero, to simulate shoulder straps, are two flowers of various colors, done in pallettes. These pallette flowers also edge the skirt.

BE CAREFUL of your shoe selection if you go in for frocks of the ballerina length. A good choice is a satin sandal slipper, laced like those worn by ballet dancers, and finished at the vamp with a removable cluster of field flowers.

NICE DETAIL marks many of the coats designed for little schoolgirls. A new model of tan-colored camel's hair has bands of stitching, from shoulder to high waistline in back, to emphasize the fitted line. Self-collar and cuffs are also stitched. Skirt fullness is derived from centre pleat.

INVITATION TO THE DANCE is answered by choosing a frock of green. The taller bodice is in pale green satin, and the wire skirt is made of a matching shade trimmed with pleated wheels of self-fabric in graduated sizes at waist, hips, knees and hem.

IT IS SURPRISING to see so much black about town even on warm days. A nice suit of paper-weight black taffeta is worn with a frilly blouse of black chiffon.

POINT ANNE

Point Anne—Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson held a picnic on Wednesday, August 4th for the pupils of the summer school which was held in Point Anne School. About fifty children were by chartered bus to the Cedars where sports of all kinds were held including a ball game. These were very capably looked after by Rev. Father Collins. Following the sports a bountiful lunch was served. The children all report a happy time and were very grateful to Father who were the means of making the picnic a success.

Give Practical Application To Books

Lisa Suggests Parents Connect Nature And "Learning" in Their Children's Minds

(By Lisa Grenelle)

In India, most learned of poet, Tagore, in 1901 started an excognizes in some ways, the great perfinancial collapse in theory, considerably ahead of his time. In Tagore's college his students were to learn from practical experience what in ordinary colleges or high schools they memorize as theoretical abstractions. One account says:

"Boys and girls learn the three R's by keeping records of their surroundings; the manipulations of geology on their own plot of ground, and of chemistry in cooking times and manures. Nature and science are not abstractions. The child learns physics by using tools and pumps, and entomology by thwarting the pernicious caterpillars and beetles that attack him and his plants."

Not for a moment do I believe that because of this we should sill fling our text books in the air, or allow our children to do so, in order to follow in footsteps of the Tagore scale. Tagore's experiment, I believe, has not been entirely successful, as shown especially in extreme departures seldom are even attempted.

But while we cannot afford to throw away the discipline of books and theory, nevertheless, there is something to teach us—that we sometimes let the text books be an end in themselves.

Ornamental Elegance?

Should "Scientific" be regarded merely as an ornamental elegance, adding to prestige but of no practical use, like "Sir", or a pair of silver forks, draped about the shoulders? Such, I assure you, is the way a surprising number of college and high school students consider it—and their parents along with them.

So the child, after examinators, naturally forgets abstractions, buried in text books, because they are not connected in his mind with reality. And so he finds them difficult to pronounce. "Entomology"—what a meaningless mouthful that is! Or, if he remembers it, he ceases to study insects first hand, and ceases to fight them for the life of your plants, perhaps.

The normal human memory is a ruthlessly practical machine. It has no stomach for abstractions, a few exceptions notwithstanding. It will not, whether we will it or no, clutter up its shelves with information having no bearing on the case.

Help the children to use their despised school text books in practical problems and experiments. Give the school a kitchen and commer, and connect text books with nature in the children mind, even if it does mean specimens all over the house—and the poets! Despite all those rocks that dirt, its worth it.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

It's Up to Him to Continue the Friendship

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a lad 18 years old. We've seen a good deal of each other, because his sister and I are chums and we go round together. She gets me in a lot of trouble with him by repeating things, and not always getting them straight. And so I have been advised not to go with her any more.

Now the whole family is going to move far away very soon, and I am wondering how I am going to see him. I love him with all my heart.

Lonely

If he is really interested in you, he will not hesitate to let you know he will be glad to hear from you. And he will certainly make an effort to come to see you some time, or will ask you to visit him.

Brothers who are really interested in girls are not apt to let their sisters' misquotations break up friendships.

He Refused to Kiss Him

Dear Miss Fairfax:

About two months ago, I met a boy at the house of a girl friend, and discovered I liked him very much. I met him several times at different parties, and he seemed to like me. He asked to kiss me good night after the last party when he took me home, but I declined because I didn't want him to think I was one of those easy kissers.

I haven't seen him since. But if I do meet him again, which seems probable, because we all belong to the same bunch, shall I show I'm still interested and like his company, though I haven't changed my mind about being an easy kisser?

Sally

Unless they're bashful to the last degree, have high ideals about kissing, or have become recently engaged (and not even then can they be depended upon), nearly all boys take a chance in finding out whether a girl kisses or doesn't.

It's my opinion, deduced from reading hundreds of letters which have come to this column, that after recovering from the slight rebuff of being refused, boys are as friendly with the unkissable girls as they are with the more easily persuaded type. They're more or less like stamp collectors, and it's the pleasure of the search that is more getcessed.

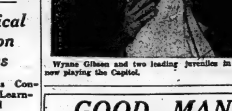
By all means, show him that you enjoy his society.

No, a Mother Doesn't Give Her a Shower

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Against my wishes, my daughter is marrying a man who, I'm afraid, will never be able to take proper care of her. He seems to have no one of what people regard when they are going to see up housekeeping, and my daughter is almost as bad. I have given her a handsome wedding dress and her trousseau, and I expect to give her a nice wedding supper. But I just can't buy all the things they need for their apartment.

Thought of giving them a shower, but someone told me it would not be proper. Is that so.



Worried Mother.

It is unusual for a mother or close member of the bride's family to give a shower, as, of course, it is an invitation to bring presents. But one of your daughters girl friends could give the shower quite properly, and you might put out a few feelers in that direction.

GOOD MANNERS

Gift to Hostess

Dear Mrs.: Beeckman:

Q.—Friend A, a girl of my own age, has invited me to the lake for a few days. I am not in a position which would enable me to return the invitation, but I would like to either give or send a little gift to show my appreciation. Could you please offer a few suggestions as to an appropriate gift and when should I send it?

A.—Friend B and I have been invited by a lady to spend a week-end at her summer home. Our hostess will be known to my friends but I have never had the pleasure of meeting her. Should we give a joint acknowledgment of our appreciation? What would be an appropriate way of doing this? After our return I presume we should write a note of thanks?

Your column is very interesting and helpful to me, and I take great pleasure in reading it.

C.

I—As an indication of your appreciation of this so-kind hospitality, especially since you cannot return the hospitality, make your guest-gift a consequential one . . . a gift that will be a lasting remembrance. A handsome, carefully selected silver lame one, makes an important present. Or one or two pieces of lingerie. Or half dozen of especially fine white linen handkerchiefs, embroidered with her initials or with a monogram or in the pleasant fashion of using the full name, would make an excellent present. Or some gloves, if you know her size, and her taste in gloves. Or a pen and pencil set stamped with the facsimile of her signature. Or a traveling clock stamped with her initials, in silver or gold.

You should write a note of appreciation of this invitation, before you go on this visit. And the very next day after your return from this visit, you should write the very nicest note you can to tell of your thanks for her hospitality, to mention specifically your appreciation of things your hostess especially planned for your happiness (a dinner or luncheon party, a tea party, the meeting of delightful friend one of the hostess, a charming guest room she provided) for you, her lovely garden, her books that you enjoyed reading, and any other things that gave you pleasure). While you are on your visit, keep your eyes open to determine something that she would like for her home . . . and send her that with your bread-and-butter letter. Or send her two or three books that you are sure that she would enjoy reading, having marked the ones in reading while you are in her home.

Order of Serving

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been having a controversy with some of my friends as to the proper sequence in which the host should serve the family and guests at dinner? I think the hostess should be served first, while one of my friends thinks that it is proper to serve the guests first. Please settle this for us?

You are wrong about this . . . the hostess should not be served first, as explained by Mrs. Salisbury in a passed at the table by a maid, or a waiting man, as the case may be. In both cases the woman guest of honor is served first . . . to add to that important word "Ceremony". When the host is serving he serves first the woman guest of honor, who should be seated at his right, then the woman holding second place of honor at the left, then the other women guests (the family members last) and last of the woman, the hostess. Then the man guest of honor, the man at the right of the hostess, then the man holding second place of honor, at her left, then the other men guests, and last, of course, himself. . . .

The more usual: as he passes each plate, he designates for whom it is, "Mrs. Wood (or 'Mary'), this is for you."

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

ARE YOU ONLY A THREE-QUARTER WIFE?

THERE are certain things a woman has to put up with and be a good sport.

Man, because they are men, can never understand a three-quarter wife—a wife who is all love and kindness three weeks in a month and a half on the rest of the time.

No matter how your back aches —no matter how loudly your nerves protest—don't take it out on your husband.

For three years now one woman after another has told us how to go "smiling through" with LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound. Its Sulpa Nature zone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three periods of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go Smiling Through.

Proper Make-up Makes Her Look and Feel Fit

(By Helen Follett)

That a synthetic blush freshens many a woman's face and spirit wife who has the busy household's not to be doubted. The busy housewife who has been drudging all morning and feels "scrubby" takes care of her person, runs a comb through her finger wave, puts on lipstick and a bit of cheek coloring and her shadow of servitude fall from her. We are like that. How we look, we feel.

Rouge comes in three forms. The compact is convenient to carry in the purse and can be applied easily, but the pink powder blows away. Cream rouge is more likely to give a soft effect, and the edges of the application can be blended with the powder.

Liquid rouge sticks like a friend and a brother. Moisten a bit of cotton with water, squeeze fairly dry, add a few drops of rouge and sweep lightly over the cheeks. It's grand for swimming; it can be removed easily with soap and water.

Getting the right color is important. Vivid tones are distinctly taboo. Reds that carry an orange cast are becoming when the skin's pale tawny.

Pride and self-respect should cure any grown person of nail biting, it's a habit that is dangerous to the health since bacteria is picked up by the nail saves. Who wants to be a carrier?

A weekly manicure is necessary. Broken edges is what starts the nibbling.

When Bandaged masses clog the pores, don't use cold water. Most of that will not help. A thin cream will help. The use of soap and water before applying the cream is advisable.

Close your eyes and shake your head with the pastries are passed. By eliminating fats from the diet, the sebaceous glands will be less active.

MASSASSAGA L.A.

The regular meeting of the Massassaga Ladies Aid was held on August 5th, at the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. John Weese. The cottage is located on the eastern shore of Robbin's Lake. The lake found the fresh breeze delightful and cool after the intense heat of the morning. The interior of the cottage was beautifully decorated for the occasion with many bouquets of gladiolli and delphiniums.

This month Miss Alma Ackerman was in charge and had a very amusing and interesting program. The meeting opened with an old familiar hymn. Mrs. Clarence Thompson read the Scripture lesson. This was followed by prayer. The business arising from the minutes of the new business was conducted by Miss Broad. Among other things was a musical selection given by Mrs. K. Ackerman and a humorous reading by Mrs. R. Lazier. The meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

A delicious luncheon was served by the hostess.

About 3.30 every one left feeling satisfied that the lake breeze and the afternoon spent at the cottage.

TWO MEN NAMED IN MURDER CASE

One as Witness Recounts at Inquest How Man Was Killed

Montreal, Aug. 11 (CP)—A coroner's jury decided today that Lionel Gauthier and Rolandeal Benoit are criminally responsible for the slaying of Hyacinthe Cote, wealthy real estate operator, whose body was found in a lonely spot outside the city July 24.

Pale and shaken, Gauthier recounted at the inquest this morning how a car driven by Benoit drove Cote to his death July 20. Cote's body was found four days later in a berry-picker in a field at St. Laurent, about seven miles north of here.

Benoit, painted by Gauthier as the actual slayer, did not attend proceedings. He remained a prisoner in a cell at Montreal Police headquarters while Gauthier narrated full details of the slaying of Cote, with robbery as the motive.

Gauthier told of persuading Cote into the death car. He said Benoit had approached Cote in the latter's office and persuade the realtor to go on an inspection of some wood. The automobile had been rented for the occasion.

Gauthier said he had driven the car, Cote sitting in the front seat and Benoit being alone in the rear. Then the automobile swung into the outskirts of the city, Gauthier said, Cote was struck on the head by Benoit, carrying a heavy stick for the purpose.

Then Cote was dragged from the automobile, robbed and strangled. The body was placed in a ditch and a pile of rocks were used to cover it up.

MARKET COMMENT
Gold Situation Sounder Than Generally Realized

During the past month, the gold situation has taken on a distinct change for the better. For the first time since the sterilization of gold was instituted on October 24, the United States has lost gold from its inactive fund, write "Canadian Business" in their current issue.

Through the exchange of gold for Chinese silver, the United States is, in effect, making definite use of gold which had previously been deliberately sterilized. And through support of Brazilian milreis by purchase of 80 million cruzeiro advance. Washington is doing its best to keep these countries back into the gold fold.

During recent months, Russia has shipped gold to England and the United States. It is now believed this shipment totalled a large amount of Spanish gold and not increased Russian gold from Soviet mines. If this is true, then fears of Soviet gold dumping have been over-emphasized.

Japan has exported about 100 million dollars of gold. Through revaluation of the yen a "profit" is being shown on the gold held by the Bank of Japan. Another 100 million dollars of gold may be consequently exported, but no serious flood is anticipated.

The revaluation of the franc could release gold from France but the feeling is that France will cling tightly to its gold.

Now that the United States and Great Britain have 16 billion dollars of the world's monetary gold supply of 25 billion, and as France has nearly three billion of the remaining 7 billion, the situation can be dominated by co-operation of these nations and France. Last however, is to persuade other countries to build up their gold reserves.

It appears, therefore, that there should be no early recurrence of the "gold scare" although gold stocks may have to await a clarification of new market phase before realizing material advances, the situation seems somewhat more than is generally realized.

Many traders, who are in a solid-out condition, are remaining on the sidelines pending a better view of the market outlook. The general impression on Wall Street is that a better market will prevail shortly after Labor Day, but it will be recalled that a good market was looked for by July 15th, however, failed to materialize. Now that the poor wheat crop in the West is not quite as serious as was first thought, there is ample ground for higher security prices.

It is rather heartening to note that the average man in the Street does not consider the prevailing labor unsettlement as serious. In all probability, amicable settlements will be effected. The fact that the shares of Dominion Textile has held exceptionally well attests to this.

YANKEES LEAD BOSTON BY 4-3 AT END OF 7TH

Boston, Aug. 11 (AP)—A record mid-week crowd for Fenway Park, 38,500 fans, turned out this afternoon to see the league-leading New York Yankees clash with the second-place Red Sox in the first of two successive doubleheaders.

Half an hour before game time the gates were closed to all but those holding reserved seat tickets.

Manager Joe DiMaggio, whose Yanks are 9½ games in front, sent Red Ruffing to the mound against Lefty Grove.

DiMaggio Cheats One.

The Yanks lost little time going out in front. Frank Crosetti got on base on Buster Mills' muff of his high fly and after Red Rolfe had grounded out, Joe DiMaggio belted his 32nd homer of the season and first in this park.

After Ruffing had retired the Sox in order in their half of the first and Grove had done the same to the Yanks in the second, Boston got one run back in its half of the second. Jimmy Foxx led off with a single and went to second as Ruffing fumbled Bobo Newsom's grounder. Newsom was safe at first to the bases and Foxx scored on Moe Berg's long fly to Keller.

Fanned Gehrig, Dicked.

Ruffing walked to open the Yankee third, but Grove bore down to get DiMaggio on a pop fly and fan Gehrig and Dickey on strikes to end the second inning. Ruffing set down the Sox in order.

Hoag singled with two out in the fourth but Ruffing grounded out. With Newsom on third in the first half as the result of Crosetti's error, DiMaggio drove in a run from damage by snaring Berg's fly in deep centre.

DiMaggio doubled in the fifth and Powell in the sixth, but both were left stranded. Ruffing retired Bad and retired the Boston side in order in the fifth and sixth innings. Joe Cronin singled to centre to open the sixth for the second hit off the big Yankee right-hander. Foxx then went out on a short fly and Higgins hit into a double play.

The Yanks ran their lead to 4-1 in the seventh. Powell doubled with one out for the third two-bagger off Grove and, after Rolfe had flied out, Grove walked Ruffing. Crosetti singled, Gehrig, who had fanned twice, tripled to drive in two runs.

Successive homers by McNair and Chapman, with none out in the last half of the seventh pulled the Sox up to within one run of the Yanks who led 4-3.

CADET WINS FOR SECOND TIME

CUBS HOLD LEAD

Although Beaten by Pirates, Giants Lose To Boston

(By Bill Ronai, Associated Press Sports Writer).

An accident may have accomplished what the combining efforts of seven Major League clubs couldn't bring about—endangered Chicago Cubs' hold on first place in the National Baseball League.

Today, for the second time this month, the Cubs' hold on the Giants. But, as they resume their series with the Pirates, they do so in the knowledge that, for the next couple or three weeks at the season's end—they will have to struggle along without the services of Jim "Ripper" Collins, fancy-fielding, run-producing first baseman, who was such a valuable factor in their climb to the top.

Like the Yankees, the Cubs have managed to bounce back from previous injuries to key players. Tex Carleton, Larry French, Billy Herman, Charley Grimm—they are just a few of the players who would have been incapacitated at one time or another this season.

But it will take a lot of bouncing to make up for the loss of Collins. There are few first basemen in the senior circuit than the Ripper. He's no heavy hitter, a bone in his right ankle fractured as the result of a desperate but unsuccessful slide for home, is married to the dressing room at Wrigley Field yesterday, he had a batting average of .278.)

Don't Tell Story

The batting average, though, doesn't tell the whole story. It fails to show that Collins was fifth in the league in driving in runs, that he clouted 18 homers, that his defensive work had been just what Dr. Grimm ordered when he took the Ripper from the Cardinals last summer in a deal that also involved Lonnie Warneke and Roy Parmelee.

With the last third of the campaign in sight—the Cubs' 6-3 defeat by the Pirates yesterday left their 100th game, and Collins had been in every one—the first base portfolio now must be entrusted to Phil Cavarretta, Partime outfielder whose fielding average in 1936, when he played in 118 games at first base, put him in seventh place among the regular incumbents.

The Cubs' hopes were homing in the Pirates and Al Todd's four-run homer, Benton Bess' help them down. Meanwhile, on ground the Giants, Danny MacFayden, veteran Boston righthander, held the effective six-hit damper on the Terrymen, that pushed them, 6-1, and gave them a record of one unearned run in their last two starts.

Cards Mess Up

Meanwhile Cardinal Warneke moved a victory ahead of teammate Dizzy Dean by hand-cuffing the Reds, 5-2, for his 16th for the 12th triumph, and the Dodgers whipped the Phillies, 7-3, to back a step further away from the National League cellar.

In the American League the Senators went off on a scoring spree that produced a victory over the Athletics by 15-7 and 8-6 and thereby gained within a game of fifth place. The White Sox moved into third, half a game and one percentage point ahead of the Tigers, by nosing out Mickey Cochrane's crew, 5-4.

The Yanks and Red Sox, in Boston, and the Browns and Indians in Cleveland, were rained out.

40,000 PRESENT AT HAMBLETONIAN

Twelve Trotters Will Parade to the Post For Race

By ORLO ROBERTSON

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Goshen, N.Y., Aug. 11 (AP)—Pat Avenue, Broadway and just plain Hambletonian Day moved in on this little horse-loving community today with the 112th Hambletonian as the magnet.

Twelve of the finest three-year-olds of harness the sport has available have been named for the race, richest of the season's stakes with a value of close to $40,000.

The first mile parade to the post at 2:00 p.m. E.D.T. for the first of the two heats in the classic.

The race figured to be a three-horse affair involving Deseda, owned by Paul Bowser, Boston wrestling impresario; Schnapps, owned by Hamilton Bowman, victory for the Winston-Salem, N.C., tobacco magnate, W. Y. Reynolds, and Twilight Song, pride of Bill Strang's New York-owned stables.

Deseda, a $7,500 investment as a yearling, jumped into the spotlight less than a month ago after Schnapps and Twilight Song had dominated the 1936 two-year-old situation and carried off early honors on the grand circuit. He won one heat of the National Stakes at Old Orchard Beach, Maine, in 2:3[illegible], took an overnight event at the same track and then whipped his two rivals in heats in the American stakes, a week ago at Agawam, Mass.

As the result, Deseda was installed the 7-5 favorite with Schnapps and Twilight Song held at 3-1 and 9-2 respectively.

A victory in any of the others would be a decided upset even though Aldrich Hanover, 1935 favored by many by reason of her fine record over midwest half-mile ovals.

Letter to the Sports Editor

August 10, 1937

Sports Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer,
Dear Sir,—

You in your column, of Saturday, August 7, and Art Cole in August 10, both quoted a cry that is not necessary, referring to your constant moan of amalgamation with R.C.A.F. What this large desires is that R.C.A.F. place a team in this group and with Signals at Kingston, round out a six team group.

Further it is my impression that there is a dearth of material in this town, which is not so. However, until practices commence no one knows what is what. Give the local boys a push up and they will give all a pleasant surprise.

As R.C.A.F. have already been asked by myself as representative of the Ontario Rugby Football Union to enter a team this year, I personally hope they vote to do so. Financially to the Belleville Rugby Club a big gate. Furthermore under the "A" and "B" playoff setup supposing Belleville doesn't win the group and second be just as good to go on in the 'B' playdowns.

Of course if R.C.A.F. doesn't enter a team, a player from there desiring to play with Belleville will be made welcome. But we give that a rest. There are some surprises in store for all and sundry.

Yours truly,
Wm. A. Fry,
Manager Belleville Rugby Club.

BELL - SARGENTS TO PLAY CORBINS 3 GAME SERIES

Series Will Decide Int. "A" Title and The Right to Enter Playdowns

CITY SERIES OFF

Point Anne And Asimaas Enter Playdowns in Respective Groupings

The championship series for the Belleville and District Softball Association has been indefinitely postponed according to Harry Rollins, convenor for the Ontario Amateur Softball Association in this district but a series to decide the Intermediate "A" title for this city will start tonight ll possibly between Corbin Lock and Bell Sargents and continue each night until either team has won two out of three games. This decision was reached after Mr. Rollins held a lengthy conversation with Dick Secretary of the O.A.S.A. at Guelph today.

Point Anne will continue in the Intermediate "A" Provincial playdowns as scheduled and drawn, meeting the winners of the Trenton series on Sunday night. The Asimaas Juniors under the tutelage of "Red" Thompson and Art Bowler will play as a junior "A" team in the Provincial playdowns, this team starting their first round near the 20th of the month.

Owing to the wet condition of the softball diamond at Odessa-Plaza, the fourth and deciding game between Asimaas Juniors and Corbin Lock scheduled for last evening was not played. The Corbin team claimed they were not notified of the postponement but a large field after the game had trooped out the difficulty satisfactory to all concerned. When the series between Asimaas and Corbins and the winner of this series meeting Point Anne for the district title will be played was not determined. The team in the loop, Asimaas and Point Anne will be busy with their playoff games and there will not be time between the competition of the series with Corbins and Bell-Sargents and the starting of the playdowns. The intermediate "A" winners must be ready to play Peterboro in Belleville on August 18 or one week from today.

ORIOLES SPLIT DOUBLEHEADER

Baltimore Team Now Only 2 1-2 Games Out of Fifth Place

(By The Associated Press)

The meteoric rise of Baltimore Orioles to playoff contention is heightening interest in the International League pennant race where the Orioles are looked on now as the only real threat of giving Newark a battle in the post-season series.

With the Bears 25 games in front of the field and busily piling up what may be the greatest lead a pennant winning team ever held, the return of the Orioles to the form that was expected of them in the early season has put them in the loop new interest. The experts figure that if anyone can stop the Bears from making a runaway of the playoff as they have of the pennant race, the Baltimore birds are the team to do it.

The Orioles, hustling every inch of the way, have won 10 of their last 11 games and have also won from seventh place to sixth, only 2½ games behind the fourth-place Montreal Royals. They split a doubleheader last night by taking the first game 4-3 as they are virtually tied with the fifth-place Toronto Maple Leafs.

BILLY "THE KID" MEETS FIELDING

Fielding Known as "Lion of North" And Fearless Grappler

For the main bout on Friday at the Arena, Promoters Jack Kennedy makers announce that they have signed Billy "The Kid" Toronto, to meet Billy the Kid of Toronto, Fielding, who is sometimes called "the lion of the north" is a wrestler of the aggressive type, who has been wrestling professional for the last Eastern part of Ontario with great success, and it is only with difficulty that the match-maker has succeeded in signing up this notorious villain. Billy the Kid, known as "Terror" the Kid of Toronto, he will be meeting a man, who is one of the most scientific grapplers to meet this day. Billy the Kid is "rarin" to get his shield on for a fast and thrilling bout for the fans.

In the semi-final Red Garner, the Belleville lightweight champ, Eddie Payne of Port Perry. This will be the third time these two boys meet in the ring. Eddie Payne, a Tarzan-like individual, has been showing some of the furious bout and as Red Garner has been showing the speed of the local fans, this bout should be one of the colorful events of the season.

Eddie Gazely, the local boy, who is fast coming into his own, comes into the ring against the veteran Jimmie Timoski, for the preliminary.

Jimmie Simpson, the well-known West Toronto boy, will be referee in the Arena, will act as referee.

COUNTY TITLE TO MINTO TEAM

Defeat Thomasburg 16-9 in Third And Deciding Tilt

Stirling, Aug. 11 (Special)—Playing on a soggy slippery field, before a large crowd of enthusiastic fans at the Stirling Agricultural grounds on Monday evening Minto baseball team proved their supremacy over Thomasburg by defeating them 16 to 9 in a game that was full of thrills despite of several bad errors by players of both teams. It was the third of a three game series Minto losing the first game 13 to 9 and winning the second 14 to 7, they combined their winning streak to take the championship and the trophy on the neutral field at Stirling. Plenty of regular supporters of both teams were on hand to cheer the favorite sons, a large number of fans that have followed the activities of the Rawdon league were on hand to see the performance of the team which will eventually play-off with the leaders of the Hastings league. Considering the condition of the field and grass playing conditions the fans were sufficiently impressed to expect a real contest, which it was, the champions of both groups clash.

Thomasburg took the field first, and Mumby, the first batter for Minto, connected with the first ball pitched by Rivers for into right field for a home run and the only hit of the inning. Minto garnered eight runs in the third, Rivers was relieved by Thompson in the fourth and six more runs crossed the plate before Thomasburg retired their first which came in the fifth, when four was their total. Minto clicked for two more in the fifth and were held scoreless in the last two innings. In a game rally by the Thomasburg team brought their total to nine runs in the last inning of the championship game, Minto 17, Thomasburg 9.

Both Rawdon and Huntingdon leagues have provided the fans with a fine brand of ball throughout a successful season and the champions of each group will engage hotes in a play-off series to be arranged later. The followers of all three of the leagues are on hand to see the comparison and Rawdon will be here.

The teams:

Thomasburg: A. Rivers, L. Morton, A. Dudgeon, N. Longiven, C. Carter, G. Blakely, G. Yeoman, L. Adams.

Minto: Mumby, Reid, G. Gibson, Ross, Thompson, Gibson, Donohue and Hagerman.

Umpires: Bailey and Heath.

"DRY" FOR 27 YEARS

Leamington, Ont., Aug. 11.—(CP) Ontario Government officials have apparently been rounded up as to how "wet" this Essex County town is. Ballot papers to be sent in the Sept. 17 vote on the beer question, were received this week. They read:

"Are you in favor of the continuance of the sale of beverages under the provisions of the Liquor Control Act?"

Leamington has been "dry" for 27 years.

COUNTY TOWN NEWS

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

Today's column is contributed by Alderman Ernie Baldrey, Vice-Commodore and Chairman of the Sailing Committee of the Belleville Yacht Club.—

We must all, sooner or later, get away from the daily grind and enjoy a few holidays. This even applies to reporters. So, in the absence of the genuine sports commentator of Central Ontario, "Ken Colling", the writer will endeavor to pinch his for him, and give you the dope on sailing.

How many of you sports readers can recall the following incident, giving the names of the boats concerned, and jog your memory and report your findings to Ken upon his return.

It happened about 26 years ago, at the southwest buoy which was anchored near the vicinity of the Consumers' dock. There were three boats of "A" Class, bunched at the buoy; the race boat pulled out from between the other two; a puff from the West took the outside boat broadside, capsizing it, and in so doing, the overturning boat carried the spar from the other outside point. The centre boat continued on and won the race.

Remember the prize in those days? Three bucks for leading the parade, $2.00 for second money, and the third place. How about these prizes for next season? Pine Iota to encourage sailing, eh what? I understand there are two new boats being built for the "A" Class which will be completed in the Spring. Wonder how the Joka will perform against these babies.

Do you know that the statistics of the Yacht Club reveal the fact that 4,000 yachting fans have enjoyed our races this year to date, and over 2,000 automobiles have stood on the Bay Front Dock. Harbor Master Coal Docks and the New Dock, and a large majority of these have been American tourists? Does that help for our memorials, don't you think? We at least held them over.

Three sayings from the Town Crier: Money will never get it. After Yew in first position unless you entertain fear. Nothing like that of his wind. Why starve her, Morris? I'm surprised, and air is so cheap now.

The Duke should be handicapped at least two minutes each race. What! You don't think so? Well, check up on his record of wins, time and.

Now' take the Alaska, for instance. Water-logged, and 'Anome 'Arry as bailast. My! My! What a sad tale! Another Class. But a real boat and a sporty crew. Will have a race anytime it's a swimmer is in trouble. But then, saving lives just comes natural to our energetic and gentleman—Harry Semark.

One of the biggest boat deals in the history of waterfront was climaxed last week. A certain young fellow named Saunders took over the ownership of the Keywaten, a 12 ft. sailing punt from Ducky Boy. Did the reported price of one air rifle, 5 cents and a punctured automobile tube. All concerned were well satisfied and happy. Ducky says she's a 'Daisy'.

The Leather Masters

By JOHN NICHOLAS

Staff Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

Kid Rainey and his manager, "Doc" McCurry, looked at the boy that trembled like an air rifle shot.

They burst into an adjoining room, their nostrils assailed by the acrid stench of burnt powder. A little puff of bluish smoke still hovered in the center of the room. Beneath it on the concrete floor lay a sheet of paper weighed down with a splotch of flattened lead.

Doc McCurry's bean mind immediately grasped the situation and he ran out of the room into the corridor bearing the stands of the baseball park. He searched its entire length but found no one. He turned to the room he saw Kid Rainey glaring at the paper gripped clumsily in his taped hands.

"What's it say?" Doc queried.

"A lot of nothing, if you ask me." The Kid passed the sheet to his manager.

McCurry squinted his eyes at the scribbling and read:

"Better luck next time, scrap tonight. There's five more slugs in the rod that pinned down this note. Try any double-crossing and you'll get them all between yer ribs."

The note was unsigned. McCurry read it again and cursed angrily. "Just when I had everything fixed for easy sailing—"

"How much would we lose, by throwing the fight, Doc?"

"Fifty grand. This was to be our big take."

The Kid whistled softly. "Too much. Wayne gonna win."

Doc whirled to him. "But this mug will kill you. He's some gambler who sank his roll on Crane and he means business. He wouldn't do this room, put the paper on the floor and then frog a shot at it to show that he's got a gun, with a silencer and that he's not afraid to use it."

He began to pace the room, thing feverishly.

His fighter was a favorite to win the headliner that night by decision. He was matched against a hulking brute long past his prime. The Kid was assured of victory because of his speed and knowledge of boxing. Victory would mean a chance at the title and fifty thousand dollars in side bets cleverly placed. But . . . .

Some one knocked on the door. He opened it and a red-headed man grinned at him.

"The Kid's next on the bill," the man announced.

McCurry nodded his head absently. "Okay, Jim, we'll be coming." He turned to the slim boxer behind him, inspected his hands, and clapped him on the back.

"All right, Kid, get up there." He then rounds to this fight. We'll go through with our plan. If I don't figure a way to fix that I'll let you know. Then—then we'll have to drop the fight."

Doc shoved Rainey towards the referee and grabbed the announcer's phone out of the announcer's hands.

"Ladies and gentlemen" his voice came clearly through the loud speaker. "I know you want a square deal. Fifteen minutes ago some one threatened the Kid's life if he doesn't throw the fight. We ask everybody to watch the person in front of him. If anyone takes a shot at the Kid, grab him and tear him apart. Are you with us?"

There was a few seconds of dumfounded silence. Then came a deafening cheer.

Doc returned the "mike" and left Rainey to his corner, grinning. That'll hold him, whoever he is." Kid Rainey came out confidently. He wasted no time jabbing at the big man—and then dancing nearly out of reach.

Crane, his towering opponent, missed a haymaker and clinched. The Kid insisted something into his ear and broke away. Scowling, the slugger followed and landed a hard right to his temple that made Rainey weave drunkenly. He spent the rest of that round in desperate retreat.

At the start of the second round the Kid tore out of his corner like a human dynamo. His wide, wild swings that forced Crane to cover up and then embrace the Kid had a desperate clinch.

The referee tore them apart and Rainey, grinning, rushed his foe. He seemed to have forgotten completely that he was only a boxer.

The crowd was on its feet screaming delirously. The managers were shouting encouragement, unheard by the fighters. Then the bell rang for the Kid jarred Crane with a stinging left hook and crashed the big man on his chest. Then like a flash the Kid's right swung over in an arc that had "finish" stamped on it before it even landed on the point of Crane's jaw. The big man toppled over and hit the canvas with a thud.

The Kid started for the farthest corner slowly. He knew Crane was down to stay even before the referee began to count the fatal ten.

Somewhat in a venerable shabby hotel room that night, Doc McCurry gulped a glass of Scotch and grinned at Kid Rainey who was seated opposite him.

"Well, Kid we made plenty of money; guess we're due for a long vacation. Do you know, some of our bet placers were getting as high as nine to one that the Kid would knock out Crane in the second round?" Doc laughed suddenly. "I wonder, Kid—I wonder what the fans would say if they knew that the promised Crane ten thousand dollars to do a dive in the second."

Little Benny's Note Book

I went around to the firehouse to talk to Mr. Riley the hookan ladder driver about different subjects, and I asked him how old a fireman can get and still stay useful, and he said, That's a hard question, but I can tell you one thing, there's only a few left starting in this business too young. Take the case of little Elmer Sprockets, he said.

Who was he? I said, and Mr. Riley said, He was an eleven year old boy who had always shown great aptitude for the profession. Even as a babe in arms he always blew out the match when his father lit a cigar, till at the age of one he blew out the candle on his birthday cake from a distance of 3 yards. He just had a natural gift, that's all. He could breathe in smoke with the same fluency that a oldtimer breathes out of. And yet Captain Snookem acted a little leary in taking him on as a fireman at his age, even as an exception, Mr. Riley said.

Well why, did he get hurt? I said, and Mr. Riley said, No, nothing like that, he was just plain young, that's all.

Well why, how do you mean? I said, and Mr. Riley said, It interfered with his schooling. Of course he could only be a fireman outside of school hours, but Elmer couldn't resist the temptation of taking his helmet and his axe and his rubber boots to school with him, and his teacher happened to be a former fireman himself and the site of these objects in the school room would set him off on long tales of his fire fighting days. Very inviting and instructive, but hardly educational in the general sense of the word, so the school board had a meeting and passed a rule that no pupil could be a fireman before the age of 17, so Elmer settled down to his studies and got so good he turned out to be a lawyer. He he makes a point of giving free legal advice to firemen for old time sake, and now I've got a little polishing to do, Mr. Riley said.

Strides of Modern Surgery In Treating Spine Fractures Described by Dr. W. G. Turner

Noted Montreal Surgeon Speaks to Medical Association

WELCOME EXTENDED

X-Ray Slides Shown in Describing Specific Cases

The remarkable strides made by modern surgery especially in the help and ofttimes cure of what seemed to be hopeless paralytic cases arising from fractures of the cervical vertebrae; the ingenuity of medical science in the perfection or curse culminating from long periods of intense study and the ingenious mechanical methods utilized in the ultimate cure of these cases were brilliantly described by Dr. W. G. Turner, B.A., M.D.C.M., M.C., F.A.C.S., M.R.C.S., Professor of Orthopedic Surgery at McGill University, Chief Surgeon of Shriner's Hospital, Montreal and Orthopedist of the Children's Hospital, Montreal to approximately seventy members and guests of the Hastings and Prince Edward Medical Association at a banquet tendered as the guest of honor at the Bay of Quinte Country Club last night.

In simple yet brilliantly descriptive eloquence the noted Montreal surgeon brought out in minute detail aided by the use of X-ray photographs shown on slides, the actual conditions of fractured spines of thirteen patients successfully treated by himself and colleagues, pre and post operative conditions and the various stages of improvement over various periods of time.

Treatment Not New

The so-called new technique of exposing the vertebrae, and the use of skull and long traction and bone graft with which the most of the cures were effected, is not new, Dr. Turner stated.

"We are up against this business of claiming something new. Since the establishment of bone graft by Albyy, it has been used carefully. We don't claim it is new, it is just the right thing to use. It is simply the application of the fundamental thing to apply bone graft where it will best hold. Ours is a simple study founded on failures and do not include cases, where the spinal cord has been destroyed. My colleagues and myself have made an intensive study of these cases and planned a systematic attack upon them."

Not Experimental Operations

"We have had a series of thirty seven cases," the speaker pointed out, and thirteen of these have been operated upon. Not from an experimental point of view for we became they were essential operations. All of these patients resumed their occupations within a period from six to twelve months. Several of the more important cases operated upon by Dr. Turner and his colleagues were shown in detail upon the screen. Closeups of the exposed vertebrae and the various forms of treatment, views of the condition and advancement of the patients at various stages, were flashed before the interested gaze of the audience. Dr. Turner described vividly the cause of the many accidents, the reason for operations, and the success by stages of the various operations performed.

One of the most interesting cases in the whole series, Dr. Turner stated, was that of a doctor aged fifty-five years, who fourteen years previous had met with an automobile accident and had suffered with a stiff neck ever since. He complained of pain in his legs and fingers. One day while performing an operation he slipped and fell receiving a severe jolt to the back. He became worse. And this was twelve years after the accident had occurred. His vertebrae was exposed and skull traction and bone graft used. He has now resumed his practice and is suffering no further ill effects.

Bone Grafts Used

Slowly Dr. Turner explained the varying cases and the application of the skull traction, by means of tongs, bone grafts taken sometimes from the ribs and other from the tibia, as the many pictures flashed on the screen. Another interesting case shown the medical men was that of a seventy-three year old man, who suffered severe concussion in a motor accident in November 1935. Examination showed a complete block. His vertebrae was exposed and long traction used. There was difficulty in turning him because of danger to the lungs. A rib-bone graft was made, anchoring the skull to the first four vertebrae. Two large fractures were taken out. He recovered rapidly and resumed his business on March of this year.

"Our most recent case," Dr. Turner explained, "occurred a couple of weeks ago. A young lady who had been thrown from her horse was rushed by truck to the hospital. X-rays showed a fracture of the 5th and 6th vertebrae, and we felt, that we must take changes in cases of this nature. We operated on her on Saturday afternoon, but could find no fracture but a complete block. We removed the block and the spinal cord began to pulsate. We took a bone graft from the tibia with no anaesthetic. The patient was so paralyzed that no anaesthetic was necessary. A parallel bone graft was put on. On Monday she had slight feeling in the right foot.

On Tuesday she had feeling in both feet and on Wednesday this feeling was improved. On Sunday she voluntarily moved the big toe on the right foot. Her hands were getting 'pins and needles'. Whether she will recover I cannot say."

"Had we left this woman go she was doomed. Now she has signs of feeling," said Dr. Turner. "If these cases are totally paralyzed and seem hopeless if by study you think there is a chance, the vertebrae should be exposed and traction and bone grafting performed."

Pelvis Fractures

Following the exhibit of the cervical fractures, Dr. Turner then displayed a series of pelvic and lower spinal fractures caused mostly through automobile accidents. These were followed with interest by his audience as the eminent surgeon pointed out the various methods of reduction and treatment.

Dr. George H. Stobie led the discussion, which followed on fractures of the spine and enumerated several cases, which had been treated by himself. A. Macnee of Peterborough, followed with an interesting description of some of the cases attended by him.

Dr. Turner rose to his feet at this point and refused to take the credit for the introduction of method of cure described by him. "Give Alby the credit," he exclaimed "for he was the originator of this principle. Remember, gentlemen, we operated on only thirteen cases out of thirty-seven. That is not a very high percentage and these were special cases. A high percentage of cervical cases can be treated and although it is not a general thing it is just a matter of selecting the cases then doing it. In compound fractures of the spine, if neglected and body compression sets in I would advise fusion. In six months it should be very well stabilized."

Dr. Robertson Chairman

Dr. J. J. Robertson, president of the Association, who made a very capable chairman for the evening, called up on Dr. Gerald Allison of Picton, to move a vote of thanks to the distinguished speaker. It was seconded by Dr. Harold Walsh M.P.P., Bad Hastings. Prior to the address the brilliant medical and social record of the guest speaker was adequately described by Dr. S. R. McCreary, who formally introduced Dr. Turner.

Among the out of town guests present were, Dr. and Mrs. Findlay, Pittsburg, Pa., Miss Mary Cotton, Asstst. Supt. of the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto and Doctors G. Telland, and P. Neal, Peterborough; R. Clarke, C. C. Rundle, Brighton and S. Stephen of Trenton.

The next meeting of the Hastings and Prince Edward Medical Association will be held in Picton on the second Tuesday in September. It was announced at the conclusion of the meeting. During the banquet community singing was led by James Bankier with Mr. Lee Riggs, presiding at the piano in his usual brilliant manner.

Previous to the repast Mayor Richard Arndt of Belleville, officially welcomed the guests to the city. He voiced the regrets of himself and the Hon. T. A. Faulkner, at their inability to be present through pressure of previous engagements.

CHINESE FACE JAPANESE IN NEUTRAL SHANGHAI

Garrisons of 4 Powers Brace Selves for Worst; Japan's Warships Come

Japanese Deployed Along Fringe of International Settlement

CHINESE CHARGES

British, Russian, French and U. S. Forces Mobilized

Shanghai, Aug. 12.—(AP)—Ranks of Japanese Marblehets moved into battle position in Shanghai to face Chinese regulars tonight and the garrisons of Great Britain and three other nations braced themselves "for the worst".

A "peace" conference intended to ease the crisis in the panic-stricken city ended in failure.

Backed by twenty-one warships at Shanghai's wharves, Japanese naval forces, estimated to number between 3,000 and 5,000, moved into the areas occupied during 1932's Chinese-Japanese hostilities.

Deployed Along Fringe

They deployed along the fringe of the Japanese portion of the International Settlement and Roads extending northward.

Chinese Central Government troops streaming into the city answered to no authority but the enemy. Civilian authorities would not try to stop them.

Each force indicated it was not planning to attack. But the situation needed only a spark to touch off an explosion.

Strength of Foreign Forces

British troops, 850 strong, mobilized along with Russian, French and U. S. Garrisons.

U.S. forces numbered 1,050 and French 600. A Russian volunteer company was assumed to drill.

Chinese contended that in 1932 the Japanese used their Internal Social Settlement area as a military base.

Now, the Chinese charged, they do not intend to recognize the neutrality of foreign settlements.

From the foreign standpoint, this breaks the gravest phase of the crisis.

MOST FAMOUS FLIER OF SOVIETS HEADS FLIGHT

Four-Motor Plane Used on Over Pole Trip to New York

STOPS ON WAY

Moscow, Aug. 12 (AP)—Sigismund Levanefsky, one of the Soviet Union's most famous flier, took off today for a trans-Polar flight to New York.

Unlike two previous, successful Russian flights to North America over the roof of the world, this will not aim for the Pacific Coast and will not be non-stop.

Levanefsky and five members of his crew took off at 6:15 p.m. (11.13 a.m. E.D.T.) with stops scheduled at Fairbanks, Alaska; Edmonton, Alta., and—possibly—Chicago.

4-Motor Plane

Their four-motor plane—vastly different from the wire-and-strut single-motored craft of the fliers' predecessors—rose from Shchelkovo Airfield, outside Moscow, with a crowd of official spectators cheering it off.

Plans for the flight were kept secret until just before the takeoff.

Levanefsky and he would not try for any record, officials said the flight was intended as an experiment for regular airline service over the Polar route.

The time of his arrival in New York, the fliers said, would depend on the speed of refueling at Fairbanks and Edmonton.

He estimated he would reach Fairbanks in about 30 hours (about 5 p.m. E.D.T. tomorrow).

Use Sub-Stratosphere

"I intend flying in the sub-stratosphere," Levanefsky said, "much higher than other Intrepid and Gromoff."

Edmonton, Aug. 12 (CP)—Although Edmonton Municipal Airport officials had received no information that this city would become a trans-Polar flight terminal for the Russian fliers, they were "ready for anything" it was stated today.

Only large supply of high-octane airplane fuel on hand was the 600-gallon supply sent here for Prince Cantacuzino, Rumanian flier who made a flight across the Pole from Paris, starting Aug. 18.

It word if received from the Russia fliers by wire, arrangements can be made to have a sufficient supply of 90 and 95-octane airplane fuel on hand to fill the giant tanks, it was explained.

EIGHTEEN KILLED AS N.Y. TENEMENT HOUSE COLLAPSES

Violent Thunderstorm And Rain Undermines Foundation

STOOD ON HILL

Four Others Killed by Lightning And Drowning at Height of Storm

New York, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Eighteen bodies crowded the heavens morgue on Staten Island today, victims of a tenement collapse during a violent thunderstorm, and rescuers pressed the wreckage search of additional dead.

Two water-soaked bodies were taken from the wreckage of three frame dwellings, shaken off their m., and police commissioner Lewis J. Valentine expressed the belief they would be found in the debris. The buildings, cellars flooded and their foundations apparently undermined by heavy rainfall, collapsed at the height of a storm which produced an intensified area last night and killed four others by lightning and drowning.

All but one of the victims of the building collapse, Adam Malicki, perished in the crumbling ruins as the floors caved beneath them without warning. Malicki, one of four critically injured, died a few hours later in Staten Island Hospital where the three survivors fought to keep life in bodies broken and bruised by falling timbers.

Death Toll 18

The dead: Mrs. Virginia Sudnick 26, her son, Anthony, 2, and two daughters, Helen 6, and Virginia, 4; Francis Caston, 14; Joseph Cruz, 28; Peter Fernandez, 37; Mary Fernandez, 35; Patricia Burley, 2; Adam Malicki, 36, and Bessie Malicki, 30, his bride of a month; Mary Petrone, 44, and her son Louis, 6; Tony Pizzuto, 22; John Ambrosio, 22; Patsolina Smyth, and McBreen; Maria Silva, 26, and Mary Louise, 40.

Injured

Mrs. Marie Coral, 26; serious internal injuries; Louis Peterson, 42, whose wife and son were killed; Salvatore Pizzuto, internal injuries, and James Mitchell, 72, fractured ribs and possible internal injuries.

Patrolman Here

Police could not ascertain how many were in the homes at the time they collapsed.

Patrolman McBreen, first rescuer on the scene, died a hero. He entered the building within a few moments after the first had collapsed about 11 o'clock last night. As he disappeared into the wreck, it crashed ominously, then toppled, burying more victims. Rescuers found McBreen's body hours later, his arm around the body of a child.

Six Stetson Supervisors Attacked in Marieville Hotel

Course of Salmon River at Buhl, Idaho, Altered in Some Places as Much as Twenty Feet
—Area Close d to Public

Bottom of Farm Falls Out, Boulders, Like Houses Fall

Buhl, Idaho, Aug. 12 (AP)—Boulders—big as houses—tumbled today into a canyon newly-formed and still expanding on a farm eight miles northwest of here.

Scores of sightseers thronged to the remote ranch corner where nature is in spectacular flux, despite an order of Emil Rondvick, manager of Griffin Ranches, closing the area to the public.

Huge new cracks opened from time to time, acres of earth settled visibly and with sound effects. New masses of rock and soil, loosed along the 1,000-foot canyon rim, thundered into the youthful basin.

Fishermen complained the course of the nearby Salmon River had been altered in some places as much as twenty feet.

"At least seventeen acres of my land are gone," declared Mrs. A. Robertson, lessee of the ranch in which most of the devastation has taken place.

"It appears to me the region is above a great cavern deep in the earth, and that alleviation of pressure is allowing the surface to sink," said Horton B. Abell, Nampa, Idaho, geologist.

Other authorities said, however, they believed a subterranean river undermined the region. Not far away is the lost river which disappears into porous soil.

KING SEEKS AID OF ABERHART TO TEST BANK ACT

Would Refer 3 Alberta Acts to Supreme Court of Canada

EARLY HEARING

Declines to Discuss Alternatives Should Aberhart Refuse

Ottawa, Aug. 12 (CP)—Decision by Premier Aberhart and several cabinet Minister Mackenzie King's plan for a court test on constitutionality of the province's bankers'-license legislation, will be delayed at least until Monday, it was indicated here today.

Prime Minister King made public telegram from Provincial Secretary E.C./Manning which said "Premier (Aberhart) and several ministers absent until Monday. Your wire will be brought to premier's attention immediately upon his return."

Alberta Cabinet to Meet.

(At Bonnyville, Alta., late night, Premier Aberhart said he would call a special session of the Alberta cabinet but did not indicate when.)

In a telegram to Premier Aberhart yesterday, Mr. King suggested a co-operative appeal to the Supreme Court to test the legislative competence of Alberta to pass three statutes. They were the act requiring bankers to get licenses and subscribe to control by the provincial government, the act preventing non-licensed bankers from launching or defending sums in courts and a general act preventing any person from testing the constitutionality of the Alberta legislation in Alberta courts without the permission of the provincial government.

Cecile Only Quint Running Temperature

Callander, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP)—Cecile is the lone member of the Dionne quintuplets still running a temperature and is confined to bed, Dr. Allan Roy Defoe, physician in charge, said today. She is sitting up in bed, however, but would not go on the floor with her four sisters Friday. She is expected to join them in the play yard tomorrow.

Dr. Defoe said only inclement weather has prevented outdoor appearances of the quints tomorrow. They have been recovering from slight colds and have not been playing in sight of the tourists for the last few days.

Tourists waiting to see the quints last night had to be content with Mrs. Olive Dionne, their mother, visited the babies. Entering the nursery she stood with Cecile in the window where the spectators could see them.

TENSION WHIPPED TO FEVER HEAT IN SINO-JAP WAR

Japanese Warships Appear at Shanghai For Possible Attack

CHINESE MOBILIZE

Hundreds of Foreign Families Isolated in War Zone

Shanghai, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Chinese Central Government struck with its overwhelming numerical strength today against the threat of attack from Japanese warships lining the wharves of this greatest commercial port of China.

Troops of the Central Government poured into the Shanghai zone by every railroad and highway in an effort to assert China's authority in the area, which Japanese planes devastated in an undeclared war in 1932.

The tension which had been whipped to fever heat throughout a day of dramatic developments was further heightened at dusk by uncontirmed reports that two Japanese army transports were steaming at full speed from the island empire, carrying all the troops in Shanghai.

The sudden ingress of Chinese troops was carried out by the entire country around Shanghai and rushed hundreds of foreign families in the danger zone.

Only foreign and Chinese sources confirmed that great numbers of Chinese soldiers were choking highways and railways, advancing on the city from Hangchow, Soochow, Wusieh and other points in the interior.

The entire area outside the foreign settlements was in a state of tension.

Tomb Opening Rite Finds Bodies Safe

Sutton, England, Aug. 12 (AP)—A stirring, unusual rite of opening and inspecting a tomb erected in 1777 to see if the bodies are still there was carried out today for the 154th time.

Seven of the now extinct Gibson family are buried in the Sutton Parish church yard tomb. The members of the family who died in the 1800 century when the Ghouls was intense left a trust fund to finance the yearly inspection.

Seven coffins examined by church officials here were found to be in perfect preservation.

TEXTILE STRIKE AT A STALEMATE

One Third of Strikers at Peterboro Return to Work

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP)—Stalemate existed in the textile strike here today as one-third of the employees of Dominion, Woolsten and Worsteds Company's two plants were back at their jobs and the rest held out for more money.

Hopes of employers that the strike situation would end with gradual return of all workers were shattered late last night when a mass meeting of strikers formally turned down the proposal they go back to work pending an Ontario Labor and Industry Board inquiry to determine a fair minimum wage for the industry.

Under the watchful eye of local police, reinforced by the special provincials, the strike at the plants facing heard Charles Millard, a leader in the Canadian Textile Workers' strike of this spring, and Michael Eaglin, strike committee chairman. Organizer Alex Welch, arrested with fourteen others in Tuesday's disturbances, remained in jail unable to raise bail.

Welch's arrest was termed "unlawful" by Millard who also criticized what he called the refusal of Crown Attorney W. J. Scott to accept bail. English urged the strikers, men and women, to stand out for another week and assured them victory would then be won.

STRIKE OFFICIALS TO MEET HEPBURN

Conference to be Held in Toronto on Monday

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP)—Further efforts to open negotiations to settle the three-weeks' old strike of 1,700 employees of the Dominion Textile here centered today on a conference to be held Monday in Toronto between Premier Hepburn, a committee of strikers and company officials.

Strikers last night accepted the premier's invitation to the conference but made it plain they were not prepared to return to work pending result of a province-wide textile inquiry to be undertaken by the Ontario Industry and Labour Board.

Mr. Hepburn telegraphed Arthur Laverty, president of the Cornwall Textile Workers Union, which called the strike, that he was "most anxious to assist in strike settlement" and urge you would attend conference in my office."

Strikers will continue to picket Canadian Cottons' three local plants, Dominion Dunlop and Canada Glove and since the walkout July 30. Their demands include a general wage increase, 40 per cents, unless Hepburn can obtain an shorter working conditions.

TIGERS WITHDRAW FROM O.R.F.U.

New Club to Perform Will be Known as Panthers

Hamilton, Aug. 12.—(CP)—The familiar yellow and black of Hamilton Tigers will be missing from the Senior O.R.F.U. football season and in their stead will appear the Red and White Tiger Panthers, a new organization, it was announced today by the Tiger Football Club.

The Tiger Panthers, known as the Bengals' Big Four team, performed under the auspices of Hamilton Amateur Athletic Association, have been dropped and the Panthers to be governed by a separate committee headed by Gordon Melvin, who will replace Hamp Cline in the O.R.F.U.

"There are several details yet to be worked out," officials said, but it is only stand upon its own feet, but with the exception of assistance a strong bid to provide powerful opposition to Balmy Beach and the Garnia Imperials.

Irrigation Bombing Nearly Costs Life

Nelson, B.C., Aug. 12 (CP)—British Columbia police said last night bombing of an irrigation flume in the Grand Forks district Tuesday nearly cost the life of W. J. Gibbs who was working in the flume when it exploded.

Police said the blast apparently failed to accomplish its full purpose. Had the dynamite blown up the flume as larger One which, with the dynamite, they said, it would probably have destroyed also the pump-house. The tank was only partially damaged.

The outbreak of incendiarism and bombing in the predominantly Doukhobor settled Grand Forks district caused damages to a Doukhobor community Hall and a Canadian Northern Railway car of railway tie.

KING MINISTERS ASSASSINATED

Reported Soldier Shot Pair at Mosul Airport

Jerusalem, Aug. 12 (AP)—Reports of assassinations today and Bekr Sidki Pasha, Iraq Minister of Defence, and Colonel Mohamed Ali Jawad, Chief of Iraq's Air Force, had been assassinated.

The reports said a soldier shot the two men at the Mosul airport at sunset yesterday. Mosul is 220 miles northwest of Baghdad.

The Baghdad radio said Iraq—Mesopotamia—formerly was a part of Turkey but now is an independent state bound to Great Britain by a treaty of alliance. It borders Syria on the northwest and embraces an area of 116,600 square miles. King Ghazi is sovereign.)

Harbor of Naples Threatened By Prize Hospital Ship Burns

Spectacle Rivals Eruptions of Vesuvius as Shipping Menaced

FIREMAN VICTIM

Naples, Aug. 13 (AP)—A spectacular fire which threatened all the shipping in Naples harbor destroyed Italy's prize hospital ship, the Helios, early today with the loss of scores of thousands of persons watched.

One fireman was asphyxiated in the engine room and hospitalized. Flames were finally subdued after a fight that lasted nearly eight hours.

The 12,000-ton ship, which had carried thousands of wounded and sick men from Ethiopia during the conquest of Africa, territory, made two recently, had served to evacuate wounded Italian soldiers from Spain where they had been fighting in the civil war, was towed in flames into the bay and sunk.

The fire began at 4 a.m. while Naples slept, but before the blaze was ended practically every residence in the city was out-of-doors. The blaze was so intense and the flames so high that the spectacle rivaled the eruption eruptions of Mount Vesuvius overlooking the city.

Authorities said the fire originated in the ship's medical department from a short circuit or the spontaneous combustion of medicaments.

DECKHAND DIES OF BURNS, SHOCK

Chief Engineer Colville of Freighter Newbrundoc Will Recover

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP) — Walter Britton, 19, of Palmerston, Ont., deckhand on the freighter Colville yesterday shortly after his received severe burns and shock in a soft coal gas explosion in the ship's hold in the custom.

Chief Engineer William Colville, 38, was also burned but early his condition was reported last night to be fair. He is expected to recover, barring complications.

The explosion on the boat, owned by the Patterson Steamship Lines, occurred as it made its way up the St. Lawrence near here. The Newbrundoc docked late today but Captain A. Chapman declined to disclose any particulars concerning the accident. It was understood the freight was not damaged.

Britton's mother was expected to come here to make funeral arrangements.

SENATOR BLACK NAMED TO COURT

Confirmation Blocked by Senators Burke And Johnson

Washington, Aug. 12.—(AP)—President Roosevelt named Senator Hugo Black, of Alabama, to the United States Supreme Court today, but his immediate confirmation was blocked by Senators Burke (D., Neb.) and Johnson (D., Col.).

The wiry Alabaman was named by Mr. Roosevelt to succeed Willis Vandevanter, retired, in unusual fashion. It was listed among other routine nominations but was not announced at the White House as is the custom.

The nomination immediately created a tremendous stir in the Senate, Chairman Ashurst, (D.-Ariz.), of the Judiciary Committee demanded immediate approval of it, without reference to the committee, the usual procedure for nominations.

Senator Burke, one of the leaders in the recent fight against the Supreme Court "packing" bill which Black supported, quickly objected. He was joined a moment later by Johnson, who said he would object to immediate action.

Stone Cairn is Unveiled To Mark Spot of First Tree

15 Year Old Forest in Simcoe Evidence of Reforestation Value

VALUE OF RE-PLANTING

Barrie, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP) — A stone cairn today marks the spot where the first tree was planted on April 27, 1922, in the province's reforestation and conservation scheme. The cairn was unveiled yesterday by Hon. Peter Heenan, Ontario Minister of Lands and Forests, during the first annual forestry field day and tour sponsored by Simcoe County Council.

In Hendrie Forest, eight miles north of here, several hundred municipal representatives gathered for the ceremony.

"This forest, commenced only fifteen years ago, is a tribute to what can be done by the foresight of citizens," Mr. Heenan said.

Colonel Hon. Edmund C. Drury (former premier of Ontario)," said Mr. Heenan, "Mr. Drury, he said, was one of the first advocates of a provincial reforestration program and initiated it in Simcoe County.

Dr. G. I. Christie, president of the Ontario Forestry Association, addressed the gathering at a luncheon. The county, he said, was the natural lead in the purchase of land for reforestration and the management of its woodlots.

At an evening banquet, Mr. Drury was one of the speakers.

"No work can be done which will be more to the greater advantage to the municipality, the province and the country as a whole, than this work of planting and re-planting the said area," said Mr. Drury.

PRICE OF PLATE HAS COME BACK

Joicy pet from Robert Pearsall, Prince Edward County horse, promised faithfully he would return plate. Time went by and the plate did not come home. A few days later, Pearsall received a letter from the thief stating that the plate was placed in another car by mistake, and here is twenty-five cents to cover the loss".

FIRE APPARATUS PUMPS CELLAR

While many cellars in the city were flooded following the torrential rains of Tuesday night, perhaps the worst to suffer was that of the Capitol Theatre. Four feet of water poured into this particular cellar causing damage to stores. Fire Department apparatus was commandeered to pump out the water.

HUFF'S ISLAND DODGES RAINFALL

The whims of Jupiter Pluvius are funny. While the majority of the communities in the immediate district were deluged under a miniature cloudburste, residents of Huff's Island stated this morning that that part of the district escaped without a single drop. Proof of this is seen in the fact that snow-threshing in the fields of the island is in full operation.

WORKS PROGRAM IS HELD UP BY RAIN

Employees of the local department of public works have become weather watchers in no uncertain fashion during the past few days. The reason is the past several days have been too damp to allow Front Street pavement to dry in order that repainting of the traffic and parking zones may be carried out with a special slower drying zone paint.

MUSHROOM HUNTERS SECURE LARGE QUOTA

The present week's moisture has proved a boon to mushroom hunters haunting the city's parks and lawns at the hours of dawn. Growth of the fungus has been spurred also by the combined humidity, while Victoria Park has become one of the main hunting grounds for the early birds, even lawns and smaller parts are not being overlooked.

The head proved to be not that of an octopus, but of a steadily swimming collie dog headed for land after having fallen or been thrown off one of the many cruising boats in the bay.

CANADA GEESE FLY TOWARDS THE NORTH

Nature lovers have become mystified over the apparently changed habits of wild fowl in the district this year. For the past few days large flights of Canada geese have been observed in the air flying briefly, chiefly, on air journeys headed due north to the city. Ordinarily the birds nest north in the early season. Flocks of merganser which nest in the north have been observed for weeks in the Bay of Quinte.

CRACKS SEEN IN TOMATOES

Aftermath of the recent torrential rains is seen in the wide cracks which are appearing in tomatoes in many parts of the district. Farmers at the city market this morning stated that after the rain the tomatoes "fairly bumped" and expanding with the sudden moisture which resulted in the cracks appearing at the tops of the vegetable.

Fruit apples such as the Astrachan variety were also affected in this manner. The late crops however will benefit greatly by the rain it was stated.

LIFE AT RESORTS NOT SO PLEASANT

Camping at well known spots in the district has become anything but enjoyable for the past few weeks, it is reported by local vacationers who have been experiencing more than usual amounts of wet and soggy weather.

"We've been so damp around our camp for the past week we can't keep our cigarets drawing right or the sugar dry", stated one vacationer north of the city this morning. "And the mosquitoes have been awful."

LARGE MOUTH BASS TAKEN BY CASTING

Plenty of sport for local fishermen who specialize in the art of casting is at present being afforded in the lower Moira River where some creditable catches of black bass, mostly of the large-mouth variety have been made during the past week or so. The weed beds and fringes of rushes have proved fruitful competitive hosts for the big fellows, reported to be most numerous. Spinners and bass bugs also are being taken, it is stated, with good variety of plugs offered.

RAINS HASTEN CANNING JOBS

Factories to Reach Peak of Operation Within Two Weeks

The recent rains have hastened the potential operations of the canning factories of the district. Tomatoes are ripening at a tremendous rate, while sweet corn will be harvested for canning purposes within the next ten days. The Belleville branch of the Hunter Foods Corporation will receive the first tomatoes of the season on Monday, officials state this morning. Operations naturally will begin in the early days. With the canning season easily two weeks ahead of its date, the rains and with weather conditions in favor of early production will reach the peak of their operations within the next two weeks.

AIR RIFLE PELLET HITS HOUSE DOOR

Occupants of House Calls in Police to Investigate

The windows of the empty house on Dundas Street East have been tempting to the bevy of boys with the air rifle. A few minutes later the tinkle of breaking glass gave evidence of the uterring marksmanship of one of the lads. More breaking glass and five window panes in the front of the house were ripped from the muzzle of the gun. But here misfortune crept in. One shot, apparently not a well-aiming as the remainder crashed against the door of the lady living in the next house. She called the police and they investigated. They found the rifle in a nearby house but no boy. Establishing ownership of the gun the policemen made an appointment with the owner to visit the police station today.

After all three hours is a long time to leave one's back in front of a busy garage where it obstructs traffic, but such an oversight on one of the men at work in the garage. A forgetful truck-driver left his vehicle near the corner of Coleman's day afternoon and apparently forgot it. He has since, police state, to comply with the law and have his back in front of Coleman's and the truck. Police removed it to a place where it would not bother anybody and Mr. Coleman will appear in police court at the next session.

No arrests were made last night by the local police. The cell block which usually accommodates a number of the knights of the road did not have a single occupant.

A goose was setting on three eggs and the next morning only one of them was hatched. From this egg came two perfectly formed goslings which are thriving today. The story is vouched for.

HIGH HUMIDITY NOTED IN CITY

Slight Relief When Light Rain Falls in District

Sweltering Belleville and district, who have wired perspiring brows for the past two days were expected to receive some relief from a record condition of humidity through more rain carried in on a south-blown storm late this evening.

Thourn, the high humidity was still apparent late today, relief had been given, though only a slight change in the heat was noted due to the warm south breeze.

This district and other parts of Ontario have, it is believed, experienced an all time high in humidity, believed to have registered 80 or more in saturation in Belleville alone, as against a "comfort" registration of 50, normal, and heat registrations of between 70 and 72 degrees.

Yesterday highest temperature recording was set at the city pump house at only 74 degrees at noon, but to the man in the street, it was "not the heat, it's the humidity."

THE ARCTIC JOURNEY

Who knows what results may not come from that great tour which His Excellency Baron Tweedsmuir is making in and about the Canadian Arctic. A man of vast experience in many fields, with a heart to feel and an eye to see, and a pen to record, he is like no previous holder of the office. Great as may be the service of a Governor General, he can always bring additional factors into play for the man is always greater than the office. It happens that the present viceroy is a man with the gift of expression which places him in the ranks of the great writers of this age. He won his spurs in fiction along with a place in statecraft.

Now he is in a romantic country, linked up with exploration. Early Canadian history is one of the greatest of romances, rivalling the histories of European states. He sees with a double vision—for the state, and for the world of art which reflects influence on the development of the state. He has had experiences which have pleased his warm human heart. At one place he met an aged Orkneyan native who dislikes civilization, the former manager of the trading post in the Peel River. So all along the way of his thousands of miles near the Arctic Circle he finds material for his work as statesman and for his craft as word picture and story artist.

Then he sees an aspect of Canada which many Canadians of the more civilized areas have not seen and which they have to hear of through books and newspapers. What does the average Canadian of the South know of the life afar north? Yet Lord Tweedsmuir knows. He has drunk deep of the experiences of life in these travels and he will come back richer in his literary and statecraft knowledge.

Just as many Canadians cannot see the Arctic areas which Lord Tweedsmuir has seen, he can also envision such a future and may direct that future along the channels best for this part of the British Empire which Canadians may not see. He is wise in statecraft and Canadians can confidently expect that out of the journeys about the Dominion he will be able to collect so composite and complete a view as will be a vision to Canadians through the years in which this nation is being builded up.

THOSE EXPULSIONS

The London Daily Herald has charged that two of the German newspaper correspondents who have been expelled from England have been so treated because they were furnishing information to the news agency at Berlin on the activities of Germans resident in Great Britain, some of whom are refugees from Nazi persecution. If such were the case it is no wonder expulsion has been resorted to.

Quite a different story is that of the German decision to expel the correspondent of the London Times. The point made that he can remain if he so colors his despatches to the satisfaction of the Nazi rulers. The Times of course will not submit to such treatment of news and is willing to be unrepresented rather than to have their representative color despatches according to Nazi dictation.

In this latter story as in the first there are the evidences that the Germans do not seem to understand the British attitude of the high freedom of the press. The liberty of the press is not all it ought to be in Germany where editors are put in their place according to the government ruling.

THE LEADERSHIP

Canadians of all political opinions are pleased that no change is to be made in the leadership of the Dominion Conservative party. The health of the Right Honorable R. B. Bennett is such that no change is necessary on that score and Canadians are delighted that his bodily vigor is so good. Rt. Hon. Mr. Bennett has proven his steadfastness and his strength of personality which can be a strength as head of a Government or as leader of the Opposition. He is a man of vast financial experience, and his great energy and his loyalty to principles of British justice are well known. His knowledge of the Empire is wide, he is tireless in his desire to serve his Dominion and the Empire.

So while Mr. Bennett is a firm believer in Conservatism, others beside Conservatives see in him one who has been and can be invaluable in his help to any government. He is one in whom all can feel pride as in a representative Canadian.

INVICTUS

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced or cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the Horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years,
Finds, and shall find, me unafraid:

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll
I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul.

—W. E. Henley.

FIRST TIME IN 1900 YEARS

WORLD WIDE INTEREST IS MANIFESTED IN WHAT MAY BE THE FINAL ATTEMPT to pacify the warring interests in the Holy Land and remove the age-old strife between Jew and Arab for possession of Palestine. The Arabs feel they have been betrayed, that the promises made by Lawrence of Arabia during the war when the Arabs helped the British troops repel the Turkish thrust against the Suez canal and Egypt, have not been kept. The Jews feel that the Promised land is their, particularly as promises were made during the Great War that a great Jewish homeland would be created in Palestine for the Jews of the world. The report of the special British Commission which has been studying the situation dividing up the disputed territory into Jewish and Arab tracts does not seem to suit either party, as yet. Peterborough Examiner offers this comment upon the situation:

At this time of the year Orthodox Jews bemoan their final loss of Jerusalem to the Romans 70 A.D. To their memory comes the wording of the final chapter in the book of Deuteronomy, the 34th:

"And Moses went up.... unto the mountain of Nebo to the top of Pisgah ...and the Lord showed him all the land..said unto him, This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed..."

The Jewish people feel the British government has given to them less than the Biblical promise. The Hebrew state, according to the new order for the division of Palestine, will consist of 2,500 square miles running along the sea from the Syrian border to 20 miles beyond Jaffa, midpoint on Palestine's coast. The northern section which reaches to the Sea of Galilee, is 50 miles wide. The southern portion, which averages 10 miles in width, is cut through by a belt which Britain will continue to hold under a mandate.

The Jewish state includes the most fertile lands, most of Palestine's 5,000 factories, the vaunted cubistic metropolis of Tel-Aviv, the barbor and naval station of Haifa and the city of Nazareth. For the first time in 1,900 years the Jews will have their own government on their own soil.

Considering the intense hatred between Jews and Arabs the solution engineered by Britain is a bold stroke but a wise one. And those who are inclined to scoff at the prophetic section of the Old Testament have something new about which to think.

NO ANIMALS ALLOWED

The artist who is painting a portrait of President Roosevelt has been in the habit of entering the White House by the front door of the executive offices, where the guards know him. One day recently he decided on a short cut through the side entrance. A guard halted him. "What's in that package you've got?" he asked.

"Just an easel," said the artist.

"Well, we don't allow animals in the White House," snapped the guard.

FOURTEEN PERSONS ARRESTED AFTER TEXTILE STRIKE RIOT

Arrest of fourteen persons followed the clash between police and 300 strikers at the Peterboro plant of the Dominion Textiles, Ltd., as the plant opened its doors after being closed down by a strike. Among those arrested was Alex Welsh, organizer for the United Textile Workers Union, who was held without bail on a charge of obstructing the police. Of the other 13 men and women arrested all were given their freedom, the men on bail of $1.00 and one girl, without bond. The clash occurred when strikers attempted to stop workers entering the textile plant. Police fired tear gas bomb to disperse the crowd. In the upper photograph, a striker is shown being grabbed by the police during the height of the trouble. The striker, unidentified, apparently resents the police action. The lower photograph, shows non-striking workers leaving the plant under police guard. Strikers and sympathizers thronged the street to boo and jeer at the workers.

CREW TAKEN OFF DAMAGED BOAT

Boston, Aug. 12 (AP)—The Canadian Pacific steamship Duchess of Atholl took 23 men and officers off the Danish freighter Maine late last night after a collision in fog off Boston.

Herb Tolden of the Philadelphia Record, a passenger aboard the Atholl, reported the liner, with 350 passengers aboard, was in no danger, but the freighter, its forward decks awash, was taken in tow by the Canadian vessel.

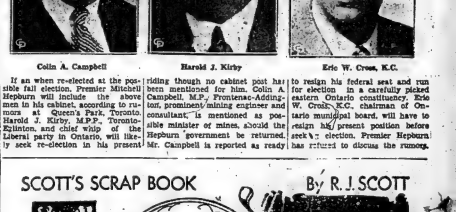
He said the Maine, of Copenhagen ownership and under command of Captain Brinck, had a 40-foot hole in its side about 40 feet back of the port bow.

Tolden reported about half of the Atholl's passengers were in the dining room when the ships crashed, about 7.35 a.m., E.D.T. They were shaken slightly, he said, and rushed to the deck.

The Atholl left New York last night for its return trip on a cruise from Montreal. The Maine was bound from Aalborg, Denmark, for Jacksonville, Fla., with a cargo of 3,200 tons of cement.

Tolden said the ships came together about 180 miles east southeast of Boston, though reports to Boston coast guard headquarters and to the ocean-going salvage tug Foundation Franklin at Halifax, N.S., varied as to position.

The Foundation Franklin left Halifax under forced draft upon receipt of the collision report.



Coast guard headquarters said the vessel had not asked assistance and was believed to be standing by the freighter until able to proceed to port in daylight.

At 7.35 a.m. (E.D.T.) the Duchess of Atholl messaged "allships" she would stand by until arrival of the tug." Coast guard headquarters assumed she meant the tug Foundation Franklin from Halifax.

RUMORED AS POSSIBLE MEMBERS OF NEXT HEPBURN CABINET

Colin A. Campbell — Harold J. Kirby — Eric W. Cross, K.C.

If and when re-elected at the possible fall election, Premier Mitchell Hepburn will include the above men in his cabinet, according to rumors at Queen's Park, Toronto. Harold J. Kirby, M.P.P., Toronto-Eglinton, and chief whip of the Liberal party in Ontario, will likely seek re-election in his present riding though no cabinet post has been mentioned for him. Colin A. Campbell, M.P., Frontenac-Addington, prominent mining engineer and consultant, is mentioned as possible minister of mines, should the Hepburn government be returned. Mr. Campbell is reported as ready to resign his federal seat and run for election in a carefully picked eastern Ontario constituency. Eric W. Cross, K.C., chairman of Ontario municipal board, will have to resign his present position before seeking election. Premier Hepburn has refused to discuss the rumors.

RED VEGETABLE PRICES LOWER

Market Today is Well Provided With Tomatoes

Heavy rains which caused tomatoes to ripen practically overnight resulted in an avalanche of the red vegetable descending on the city market today. Prices were practically slashed in two as vendors made spirited efforts to dispose of their heavy stocks.

Canning factories as yet unavailable the only outlet for the farmers in the market, and large quantities of tomatoes were available.

Basket lots dropped from fifty and sixty cents to twenty and thirty cents over a period of two days. Bushel lots were quoted in one place at one dollar.

While the tomatoes occupied the vegetable spot light a fine display of other fruits and vegetables greeted Thursday morning marketers. Potatoes remained firm in price with bushel lots priced at seventy-five cents and pecks moving at twenty and twenty-five cents. Sweet corn marked a slight decline in pastes with the yellow banian variety quoted generally at ten cents the dozen ears. Other vegetables sold well at prevailing prices.

Early apples headed a variable fruit display with the popular Astrachan variety selling at fifty cents per peck. Duchess were quoted at seventy-five cents per hamper lots with the first Alexanders of the season demanding $1.25 per bushel. Yellow Transparents and Harvesters were offered at $1.00 per hamper.

Imported peaches and Shiro plums were offered at fifty and sixty cents per basket. Elberta quart baskets of blueberries were sold at $1.50 and $1.75 each.

Eggs were quoted today at twenty-eight cents for "A" selects with the "pullets" at twenty-five cents. Whitefish and trout were quoted at twenty and twenty-five cents per pound respectively.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

Kipling's "Wee Willie Winkie" and Coronation Films

Kipling's colorful characters live dramatically, adventurously and courageously on adventure's last frontier in the Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of his famed "Wee Willie Winkie," which has been held over at the Belle today and Friday, matinee daily, by popular demand, with Shirley Temple and Victor McLaglen in the starring roles.

From the heart of mighty India, where all the world is wild and strange, where the British raj ends at Khyber Pass, in the land of the Bengal Lancers, comes this glorious adventure of the Scottish Highlanders in action and of the little girl who won the right to wear their plaid.

The most spectacular production in which Shirley Temple has yet appeared, "Wee Willie Winkie" gives Victor McLaglen a dashing new role as a fearless fighting fool, and provides splendid opportunities to C. Aubrey Smith, Michael Visaroff, Cesar Romero, Constance Collier and young Douglas Scott.

Life at a frontier army post in India is not too happy for Shirley and her widowed mother June Lang, for her grandfather, C. Aubrey Smith is a gruff old disciplinarian. The youngster decides that the only way to win the colonel's approval is to become a soldier herself, and her friend, Michael Whalen, a lieutenant, turns her over for training to the burly sergeant Victor McLaglen who dubs her "Wee Willie Winkie" because of the quaint way she has of screwing up her eyes when she asks questions.

Shirley gets into plenty of trouble at the post but wins the gratitude of an imprisoned chieftain, Khoda Khan, when she returns his lost amulet. In a surprise raid on the post, the proud chieftain is freed, and the border is immediately plunged into crimson warfare, with McLaglen's life being one of those lost.

Feeling that both Khoda Khan and her grandfather would prefer peace, Shirley takes a desperate step to end the killing, and sets out at night for the Indian camp. When her departure is discovered, the Highlanders set out grimly for Khyber Pass prepared to wage a soldier, determined to rescue her or die in the attempt. With lives at stake, Shirley takes one last gesture to save them and restore peace, bringing the picture to a thoroughly thrilling climax.

Coronation in Color

For the first time you can see the Coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth all in beautiful Technicolor, these beautiful pictures that are now being shown at the Belle picture color of robes and jewels... gay uniforms all in their TRUE COLORS. Mickey Mouse in "Worm Turns" will be presented on the same programs today and Friday.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Crack-Up" and "Michael O'Halloran"

Consider the strange case of Peter Lorre, famous European actor, who, following a sensational screen triumph, deliberately turned his back for an entire year on the fields in which he had attained so hard to achieve success. The role which brought him world-wide acclaim was in almost everyone known, that of the pathological murderer in "M."

"Although the picture was a great success," says Mr. Lorre, "the character was a horrible one. Unhappily, all the offers which I had thereafter, and many of them were very attractive, called for other horror roles. I decided that rather than become typed as a one-man chamber of horrors, I'd stay away from the screen. So I returned to the stage and portrayed the type of role I preferred."

In accepting the role of "Colonel Gimpy" in "Crack-Up," the latest drama of flying aces and foreign spys, now playing the Capitol as its No. 1 hit, Mr. Lorre felt that he had a role to which he was most admirably suited.

"Colonel Gimpy, was a character worth any actor's while," he remarked. "He's a fascinating, human part, real, with a sense of humor and a fanatical fidelity to duty. I studied the role very carefully before accepting it, as I wanted to be sure that it was not the type for terrify audiences."

A distinguished cast was assembled for "Crack-Up," featuring, besides Mr. Lorre, Brian Donlevy, Helen Wood, Ralph Morgan and Thomas Beck.

"Michael O'Halloran"

All the humor, pathos and genuine, unsullied heart appeal that won millions of readers for Dale Stratton-Porter's famous novel, "Michael O'Halloran," have been recaptured and presented with commendable fidelity in the screen version, which opened last night at the Capitol Theatre as hit No. 2.

Mrs. Porter could have wished for no more appealing a screen protagonist than Jackie Moran, the youngster who made such a hit in "Valiant Is The Word For Carrie." Charlene Wyatt as the little girl reappears and presents

Her lovely hair gets plenty of attention

By HELEN FOLSETT

FOR AN emergency freshner for scattered wave, a dash of simple cologne. Moisten a cloth and wipe the hair strand by strand. Then use your regular lotion, arrange your wave—if you are that clever—and do up the ends on metal curlers. There are times when it is not convenient to have a shampoo—you know, when the "best feller" calls up unexpectedly.

The permanent wave is a blessing to the "oilies" whose locks flatten down soon after the shampoo. It gives them substance and dries the shafts slightly. One should not have too many permanents a year, by the way. The shaft should have a chance to relax between treatments. Three permanents a year are the limit. Two are better.

When the feet are tired and aching, don't put them in cold water. Friction them with olive oil and wrap them in Turkish towels that have been wrung out of ice cold water. This treatment will put your peedie in form again.

Wipe of fine oil with the moist towel, friction the flesh with fluid cream and apply a fresh powder. A little of the powder placed in the shoes will absorb skin moisture which causes discomfort.

Contributing causes to, excessive perspiration are a nervous temperament, glandular disturbance, heavy foods and disregard for the laws of hygiene.

Bathe daily, change undies daily. Use an astringent bath powder all over the body, and a deodorizing "dry armpits". Drink water freely, cutting down on tea and coffee. If the trouble persists, consult a doctor who may discover a glandular disturbance.

There are certain colors that almost no woman can wear with flattering results. They are orange, purple and slaring green. Grey unless it is light and delicate, is a trying color. It drains the face of its rosy tone.

Child Copies Attitude of Parents

Self-Centered Adults Will Find Reactions Same in Offspring

(By Lisa Grenelle)

Herbert and Stanley and little Isabel completely ignored Cousin Alice and Cousin Alfred. In spite of various and frequent friendly advances on the part of the latter.

Sigh! Most children are shy of strange grown-ups and grown-ups with the wrong approach. One wrong step with a child and you're instantly "demoted from the foot of the class" in their eyes.

But Cousin Alice and Cousin Alfred made no false moves; they knew their approaches, where children were concerned, having reared half a dozen young ones of their own. I know that all during my own childhood, Cousin Alice and Cousin Alfred were among my few favorite grown-ups, and I, in particular, intolerant "brat", I can tell you!

Herbert, Stanley and little Isabel were the only children I know of to be the unhappy possessors of Cousin Alice and Cousin Alfred. But resist them they did. Could.

And one day: "I hear you've got some very fine pigiets. Herbert, how about giving me a look? I used to know something of pigiets."

Send Not Lasting

Indifferently, reluctantly, Herbert let Cousin Alfred to the pig pen. But even that bond gained Cousin Alfred no solid ground. The they had not been back 15 minutes when Herbert stepped back into his own world and shut the door to behind him, leaving Cousin Alfred very much outside.

And Cousin Alice met with no better success. No response could she draw from either Stanley or little Isabel.

Was it shyness? Was it just shyness?

"They're the first children Alfred hasn't been able to get to first base with," Cousin Alice murmured to me. "We usually get along with children pretty well myself."

"Do you get along well with the children's parents?" I asked.

"Why, yes. They're casual, of course, but—"

Her mother approves of me too. The other man is quite serious about her, but she doesn't wish to go "steady" yet. When I'm about ready to drop out, sometimes she gives me a little bit of hope. She would help tremendously if I were only sure of her.

Downcast

Flunk up your courage and put a little more ardor into this affair. It seems to me that you have had plenty of encouragement, and the only stumbling block is your faint-hearted attitude. Make the girl see you're no mamma, instead of sitting around downcast, waiting for her to throw you a crumb or two of hope.

Advice to the Lovelorn

by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.
(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

She Wants to Marry Secretly Against Parents' Advice

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My parents like him a lot, but they do not want me to marry him yet. It will take three years more for me to graduate in the profession they have set their hearts on my following. But we (the boy and I) feel that during that time so many drift apart.

Do you think a secret marriage will be a solution?

I have no intention of practicing this profession my parents insisted upon my entering. The only reason I am taking up the work is that I may be able to take care of myself, should the emergency arise.

Jane and Ia.

It's a question in my mind whether a profession entered into so half-heartedly would enable you to take care of yourself—in case of emergency. Why not tell your mother, I should let you marry now, and, as the present work is not money for the next three years on something in which you have no interest?

Secret marriages are not often successful. Do not be frank with your parents, and tell them how you feel about giving up that profession? Can't this profession work? See if they will not agree to your being married open and above board.

Another Case of "Faint Heart"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We've known each other for three years and I have taken one out occasionally. Still I think she could care a little more above me than she does. She goes out with another fellow often, I gather, she likes. I lack the money to show how much I care, though she has told me I could take her out any time I please.

Her mother approves of me too. The other man is quite serious about her, but she doesn't wish to go "steady" yet. When I'm about ready to drop out, sometimes she gives me a little bit of hope. She would help tremendously if I were only sure of her.

Downcast

Flunk up your courage and put a little more ardor into this affair. It seems to me that you have had plenty of encouragement, and the only stumbling block is your faint-hearted attitude. Make the girl see you're no mamma, instead of sitting around downcast, waiting for her to throw you a crumb or two of hope.

Can They Live On $22.50 a Week

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We were a little disappointed that my fiance did not get a promised raise. But he has been assured, faithfully, that he will get it by October 1st. He is still engaged for four years, and still we should be attending the aggravating adventure on Bob's present $22.50, which is $22.50 a week.

Our love is too real to be subjected to sordid details, wrangling about money. Do you think we can afford and what we cannot afford?

I've always worked in an office since I left high school, and do not know much about domestic economy. Do you think we could manage on $22.50 a week, without hating each other before the promised raise in Bob's salary comes around?

Minnie D.

To my way of thinking, $22.50 a week is ample for a family of two, not only to live on but to put by something for the ominous rainy day. With care, a budget for four can be balanced on $25.00 a week and certainly for two on $22.50.

KING SEEKS AID

Prime Minister's Attitude.

Ottawa, Aug. 12 (CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King has communicated a request to Premier William Aberhart of Alberta for co-operation in testing in the courts the newest Alberta Social Credit legislation.

(When word reached him at Bonnyville, Alta., Mr. Aberhart said he would call a special meeting of the Alberta cabinet to consider the request. He did not indicate when the meeting would be held. In the meantime, he would make no comment.)

For the first time Prime Minister King yesterday broke the silence he and other members of the cabinet have maintained on the Alberta situation since the new legislation was introduced and passed in the legislature at Edmonton last week.

Legislate Considers Act.

He announced he had sent Mr. Aberhart a telegram saying Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, was considering three Alberta Acts, including one which would require all bank managers and bank employees to obtain licenses from the Alberta Government.

Before laying this question before the cabinet Mr. King wanted to know if Mr. Aberhart would facilitate a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to the validity of the Alberta statutes and whether the Alberta government would undertake to refrain from enforcing the new laws pending a judicial determination.

Early Hearing Possible.

In this connection, in events the Supreme Court of Canada will hear the reference, Mr. Aberhart told Mr. King said an effort would be made to secure an early hearing about Oct. 1, according to Mr. King's suggestion.

He declined to discuss alternatives in the event Mr. Aberhart should object to the proposed reference or refuse to co-operate, but hinted on enforcing the new legislation at once.

Mr. Aberhart would facilitate reference, however as the Dominion government has power to disallow important question, any federal or provincial statute to the court for an opinion on law at any time.

The Three Acts.

The three Alberta Acts referred to in Mr. King's telegram are the act to require bank managers and bank employees obtain licenses; the act to prevent bank employees from publishing serious in Alberta courts if they fail to obtain licenses and the act to prohibit the testing of any Alberta statute in the courts of Alberta without consent of the Alberta government.

The reference to the Supreme Court of Canada is to determine whether the Alberta legislature under the constitution had power to enact the legislation which would give existing bank employees to take out licenses to operate in Alberta under the government through the Social Credit Board control over banking in Alberta.

The constitution, that is the British North America Act, gives the control over banks and banking, currency and credit in the national parliament.

The new Alberta act stipulates that every bank employee who applies for licenses submit the names of two responsible persons to whom the Social Credit Board would form a local five-man board with control over the policies of the licenses bank officials.

TENSION

sion was reported alive with Chinese troops, from the Shanghai-Nanking Railway on the south to the Yangtze River to the north.

Thousands At Drill.

Japanese marines, reinforced by two thousand bluejackets sent down the Yangtze from Hankow and from Japan proper, were landed at Woosung which arrived here yesterday, were drilling in the Japanese area and on the wharves.

Foreign residents outside the foreign settlement fled to safety within the settlement after warnings issued by the various consuls. Hundreds of them, however, were cut off by the suddenness of the Chinese advance. This was said to be led by the 88th and 88th Nanking Divisions.

The commander of the militarized Chinese police "Peace Preservation Corps" warned foreigners to stay within their concessions and to keep out of the areas "where Chinese armed forces are acting."

Police forces of both the foreign settlement and the French concession were placed on uninterrupted emergency duty and a special civilian volunteer corps was called to hold itself in readiness.

There were unconfirmed reports that Japanese had landed troops at the small village of Liuhe, on the Yangtze, 30 miles northeast of Shanghai. It was from this obscure village that Chiang Kai-shek's men struck the famous 19th Chinese route army in the rear and drove them from the area, fighting doggedly for each inch of land.

Air Raid Attack

Regular army units of the Chinese Central Government at Nanking were reported to have been sent from the capital into strong fortifications on the west of Shanghai to thwart any Japanese attack from that direction.

Canada-General of Great Britain and United States warned all the Nationals in the Shanghai area. See Into the International Settlement for safety.

Foreigners to the north of Shanghai in the centre of the present danger zone of Sino-Japanese hostilities were cut off from the city. Foreign women and children were caught within the barricades of Kiating, the Great Northern outskirts.

Fighting to the northeast a major battle was being fought in the unofficial war between China and Japan. Japanese troops attacked at dawn with artillery and warplanes, seeking to drive the 29th Chinese Division out of the fortified positions it is defending at strategic Nankow Pass in the Great Wall 40 miles northeast of Peiping.

Takes Grave Turn

With movement of Central Chinese Government troops into the Shanghai area, the situation has taken a very grave turn and Shanghai is seemingly doomed to become a theatre of war.

Should observers expressed fear Shanghai would see a repetition of the undeclared war of 1932 between China and Japan in which hundreds of thousands of persons were killed and hundreds of millions of dollars of property damage done.

Two additional Japanese destroyers were reported by the Harbor Office to have dropped anchor in the Whangpoo River as reinforcements for the first battle fleet which arrived yesterday with battalions of marines for shore duty.

Three of the flotilla which made the run from Japan under forced draft yesterday departed for an unknown destination about the time the reinforcements arrived.

Warships on Hand

According to foreign estimates Japan's warships are now ranging at anchor either off Shanghai proper or under the guns of the Woosung forts at the confluence of the Whangpoo and Yangtze rivers north of here.

The Chinese reports declared that the central army units were rushed by rail from Nanking to bolster the Chinese authority which the Japanese naval movements has threatened.

There are no Japanese army units here at present. The normal garrison of several thousand marines, however, has been reinforced by 1,000 marines from Hankow, up the Yangtze, and between 500 and 1,000 more bluejackets who came with the first fleet.

Arrival of regular army troops from Japan was considered imminent if the Chinese continued to display their present determined attitude here.

The Chinese population was in full flight, choking the roadways and fighting for places on all outgoing vessels. The fear-stricken Chinese from Chapei and the other areas, most heavily bombed by Japanese planes during the 1932 war, were fleeing into the international settlement and the French concession.

Go to Open Country

Additional thousands streamed through the French concession to the open country south of the city what still other thousands of more well-to-do Chinese were evacuating by ship. The waterfront from which coastal ships sail was jammed with men, women and children seeking passage. At least 100 persons sought each available spot aboard.

Those lucky enough to find space loaded the vessels until they were almost in danger of sinking. The decks were solid with masses of Chinese.

The China National Aviation Corporation suspended service to Tsingtao, port of Shantung Province.

The Chinese municipal government of greater Shanghai evacuated its palatial civic centre at Kiangwan, center of the present disturbance, and took up offices in private residences in the French concession.

GOOD MANNERS

Wedding Plans

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1—Is it correct for the bride to have her two sisters and her cousin stand up with her and have no one from the groom's family, if he has brothers and sisters?

2—If the groom is paying all the expenses, should the bride invite all her relatives and friends, and invite just a few close relatives for the groom?

3—Should the groom go to the church with the bride? We have discussed this question and we know that it is not proper for the groom to ride with the bride, but to go to church . . . but would it be proper for him to call for her and take her to the church?

1—Yes, it is correct for the bride to have her two sisters and her cousin stand up with her and have no one from the groom's family, if he has brothers and sisters.

2—If the groom is paying all the expenses, should the bride invite all her relatives and friends, and invite just a few close relatives for the groom?

3—Should the groom go to the church with the bride? We have discussed this question and we know that it is not proper for the groom to ride with the bride, but to go to church . . . but would it be proper for him to call for her and take her to the church?

1—Yes, it is correct for the bride to have her two sisters and her cousin in her wedding party. She need not invite his sisters to be in her wedding party. She certainly would invite her own sisters rather than the groom's sisters, but, if she were not especially devoted to her cousin or if she could conveniently increase the number of her attendants, it would be pleasant and polite and considerate of her to include one as least of the groom's sisters. It is a charming how for her to make to the groom and his family. One of the groom's brothers, probably the oldest one, will probably be invited by the groom to be his best man, and, if there are to be ushers, the other brothers should be invited to be ushers. The bride does not do the inviting of the best man and the ushers, although if the bride has a brother the groom usually includes him in his list of ushers.

2—It is not correct for the groom to pay the expenses of the wedding. These are the responsibility of the parents of the bride or of the bride herself. The groom usually pays the bride her bouquet, and also sends corsages to her mother and to his mother. He pays for the marriage license, gives the fee to the clergyman, provides the car in which her bridal party, and his best man, come to the church. But the other wedding expenses are not, should not be, his. And the bride who "invites all her relatives and friends, and invites just a few close relatives for the groom" is guilty of bad taste and her social-consciousness! Why the discrimination?

3—No, it is definitely not correct for the bride and groom to go together to the church. Why money. Arrangements should be made for them to go separately, no matter how inconvenient these arrangements may be.

Shower?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for me to give a shower to a widow upon the event of her second marriage? The person in mind is not a young woman, she is between forty-five and fifty and has a grown daughter?

2—When a friend of the groom's has been asked to act as usher, is it necessary to send a wedding invitation to him and his wife?

3—Is it necessary to send a wedding invitation to the family physician and dentist?

W.

1—There isn't any rule against giving a shower for anyone who is marrying again . . . but it does seem a bit "forced". . . . In any event, the shower shouldn't be given by a relative of the bride's or groom's.

2—Yes, invitations are sent to all wedding attendants, and these invitations are sent to Mr. and Mrs. if the attendants are married.

3—Wedding invitations are sent to the family physician and dentist of the bride and groom with, this depends too on the size of the invitation-list, and on how well they are known socially to either family.

Stop Reckless Driving!

If you drive recklessly and have not made up your mind to stop it, you are going to find yourself in serious trouble —soon! The Department of Highways is determined to put reckless drivers off the road and keep them off. If you need your car in business, stop and think for a minute what would happen if you had your driving license cancelled. You might lose your job. But what is your job compared to the death, crippling, or injuring of a good citizen!

Reckless drivers are criminals going along our highways breaking laws, maiming and killing defenseless people. Our laws are adequate and fair. Obey them and you will keep out of trouble; break them and take the consequences. You cannot say you have not been warned. Stop speeding! Stop cutting in! Stop passing on hills. Stop taking chances of any kind. If you must drive slower than the average traffic, keep well to the right side of the highway or use the side roads. Do not block other traffic.

ONTARIO MOTORISTS WILL CO-OPERATE to put reckless drivers where they belong. Here is what to do. When you see a motorist driving in a manner dangerous to the public, take his number, make a careful note of the actual time and place and when you reach your destination write to the Motor Vehicles Branch, Department of Highways, Toronto, giving full details. We do not invite reports of minor infringements of the traffic laws; you are requested to use sound judgment. We will deal adequately with offenders.

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 12.—(CP)—Inability of Dr. E. R. Frankish, Ontario medico-legal expert, to attend has forced adjournment until a later date of an inquest into the death of 13-year-old Ethel Redden whose ravished body was found in a field here August 2. It was to have been held on Friday.

British Yachtsman Et Block Island, N. I., Aug 11—(AP)—T.O.M. Sopwith, British yachtsman, was reported today aboard his private yacht in New Harbor here.

D. Charles F. Perry, attending Sopwith, said the sportsman suffered an attack of colitis which developed from a cold contracted yesterday. Sopwith's condition improved considerably overnight, the physician said.

"But the bank isn't interested in loaning to us!"

So many people have the mistaken notion that the bank's function is to grant loans.

Loans to meet temporary emergencies, to finance seasonal purchases, to borrow money for periods constantly being changed by this bank to meet changing needs, these are financially sound loans. But there are many borrowers who are unable to repay within a reasonable period. Accordingly, such persons can be helped by receiving small loans by regular payments at convenient intervals.

If you are in need of funds for a temporary purpose we invite you to discuss your problem with this bank.

Yankees Increase Their Lead To 11 1-2 Games in American By Defeating Boston Twice

May Break Their Own Record of 182 Homers in Season

CUBS UP LITTLE

Many Games Rained Out in Both Leagues Wednesday

(By Sid Feder)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

The latest for the perpetuation of the Yankees as American League Champions ("Jake" Ruppert, Prez.) is on the way toward proving again that the old club is about as far as its long-range firing is concerned.

With Charter members Lou Gehrig and Joe DiMaggio as Chief "Dather-outers" of the daily dose of pitchers' poison, the swat squad has just about demolished what little race there was for this year's pennant, and is sharpening up its sights for another major operation on baseball's best bombers.

They handed a dose of knockout drops to their latest challenge from second-place Boston Wednesday as the Boston Red Sox 8-5 and 10-4 in both ends of a double bill yesterday, with a crowd of 36,127 witnessing the massacre at the Stadium, walked away to an 11 1-2 game lead over the pack—a lead that puts them in a class by themselves, there's a wholesale epidemic of broken bones or an earthquake or two.

May Break Homer Record

With that done, they looked over the field today and found that their 182 record of '28 homers for a reason, which was supposed to be pretty close to a limit a year ago, would be somewhat of a cinch to wipe out, and that they have a fair chance to prevent the Yankee passerby now marks for won-lost standings and for the number of which they can nail the pennant to their mast.

Dynamiter DiMaggio drove his 32 round-tripper into the stands in yesterday's 16-inning opener, and Chirpy greeted Buck Newsom with his 30th in the seven inning night-cap. That pair of payoff wallops boosted the Yankee season total to 130 in 96 official games—and counting. With 56 games still ahead and 53 homers to go, it looks as if there seems little chance that the old mark will be on hand when they finish their bombing this season.

Cubs Stretch Lead

The National League lead, currently in possession of the Chicago Cubs, also underwent a "stretching" yesterday. The Cubs took advantage of the idleness of the second-place Giants to pound the Pirates 5-1 behind Clay Bryant's five-hit flinging and boost their pace-making margin to 4 1-2 games.

The Cleveland Indians, with Bob Feller pitching a seven-hitter and fanning six in the opener, whipped the St. Louis Browns 3-2 and 5-2 in a twin bill. The Senators just lasted to take a 7-6 decision from the Athletics. If Johnson twirled the Cardinals to a 3-2 win over the Reds.

The White Sox and Tigers in the American League and the Giants, Bees, Dodgers and Phillies in the National were rained out.

Yesterday's Stars

Clay Bryant, Cubs—Allowed five hits and blanked seven in whipping Pirates 5-1.

Johnny Murphy and Lou Gehrig, Yankees—Former slammed Red Sox with five hits and one run in six innings relief role to take decisive second opener 5-3; Gehrig hit homer with two on in 10- inning win, and clouted triple and two singles driving in two runs in opener.

Joe Kuhel, Senators—Hit homer with two aboard best Athletics 5-4.

Si Johnson, Cardinals — Stopped Reds 3-2 with 10 hits, and started winning rally in ninth with single.

Bob Feller, Bill Dietrich, Indians—Former fanned six and allowed seven hits in taking first half opener from Browns 5-2; Sullivan hit homer, two singles, driving in three runs in 7-3 nightcap win.

Canadian Ace of The Grand Circuit Drives Outsider

(By Alan Randal, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Goshen, N.Y., Aug. 12 (CP) — Vic Fleming, Canadian ace of the Grand Circuit, piloted his keeper to winning the Hambletonian Stake, the prize most coveted by all trotting drivers, on an outsider, Alice Hanover, today.

Like the 11 other drivers entered in the annual Grand Circuit classic Fleming looking for bright spot under which the sorry clay of Goshen's good time track would again become a racing strip.

Then the Dundas, Ont., driver, whose name is already among those in the top bracket of Grand Circuit reinsmen, will bid for further fame, fully backed by two other Canadian drivers, his sons, Bill and Charlie.

"If I don't win this take perhaps the boys will at some time or another," said Fleming as official time rang for heigh of excitement on Main yesterday. They it will be in the family at least."

A Canadian driver, Nat Ray, now retired from the sulky, walk-up, behind Guy McKinney, Canada's first and richest Hambletonian in 1926. That race was worth $43,442.20 compared with today's $37,912.56.

Driver's Prize

"The Hambletonian is the prize every trotting driver wants to win," said the hemmed Fleming, who as "a gaffer from the farm" formed a confidence for himself even when he went to county fair races in Ontario with his father.

Fleming's filly in the Hambletonian is owned by L. R. Sheppard of Hanover, Ont., Fleming and aided by bookmakers in this little centre of thoroughbreding and sulky-pleasure, as a 15-1 shot.

The Canadian reinsman said he had the final race in Detroit when he was "about 14 or 15" and his last Canadian race was at Thorncliffe in Toronto in 1933. At that time the figure on several years of driving yet. After that he'll stick to training and already cares for the Sheppard stable entries.

The boys, Bill, 24, and Charlie, 22, are as enthusiastic about racing as their father. Unlike him, but like an entire colony of reinsmen swarming Goshen, they have already taken to long, black, evil-looking cigars. It seems they must be a standard part of driving equipment.

FLOCK'S STOCK STILL ON RISE

Orioles Win Twin Bill And Only Half Game Out of First Place

(By The Associated Press)

The Flock fans of Baltimore are beginning to wake up.

Reason? Baltimore Orioles, laughed at and chased during early weeks of the season, have at last found themselves. The Flock entertain went down on their double victory over the Buffalo Bisons, last place in the International, by half a game out of the first division.

The double victory, 7-3 and 4-3 the Flock's stock continued to climb and victory-hungry fans began to think that the Birds make up a seven game deficit and win.

Harry Matuszak held the Bisons to six hits in the first game, scattering nine. Wimpy Wilburn, Birds' shortstop, connected for a circuit clout for the winners, bringing the total to four.

Only center action in the league occurred at Syracuse where the Chiefs and the Buffalo Bisons split two games 5-4, 11-10. Chiefs won the opener 5-4 National League ace Claude Passeli, who allowed 12 hits but hurled well in the pinches.

The two clubs battled to a finish and the Chiefs three in the nightcap, which was featured by heavy stick hitting.

A night double header between Cleveland and the Bears was rained out at Newark and an afternoon double bill between Newark and Jersey City at Jersey City was also postponed because of rain.

FIGHTS LAST NIGHT

Toronto—Gordon Wallace, 146¾, Vancouver, B.C., outpointed Tommy Bland, 146¾, (10).

Bangor—Al McCoy, 182, Winslow, Me., knocked out Donald (Red) Barry, 194, Washington, D.C., (1).

A crowd estimated at fifty thousand people will view the great international race or speedway as it is termed, has been specially erected in the stadium. It is one half mile in length and included in it is two rises or small inclines, known in the soap box vocabulary, as a "double-dip". Gathering momentum as they coast down the incline, the cars are expected to reach the top of the dips and then gathering speed they dash down the second decline to thump with another before straightening away for the finish line. It is a gruelling test of both car and driver. One report has it that the winner of last year's race over this track at times reached an approximated speed of forty-seven miles an hour.

Met By Band

Sponsors of this great international event are leaving no stone unturned to make the youthful guests' stay a pleasant one. Fifteen hours will be spent in the city by the personnel of the boy drivers. As soon as each driver arrives at the outskirts of the city of Akron, he is met by a band. GORDON WALLACE DEFEATS BLAND

10,000 Witness Open Air Show at Maple Leaf Stadium

Toronto, Aug. 12. (CP)—Gordon Wallace of Vancouver may get another chance to recapture the Canadian welterweight title he lost to Frankie Genovese of Toronto last Spring. On the basis of a split decision win over Tommy Bland, Toronto, in 12 rounds here last night, the tanned fighter will likely be rematched with the champion.

More than 10,000 Toronto fans set fight covered in years, watched the open air fight, refereed by James J. Stadelman, Toronto heavyweight champion. Both Bland and Wallace weighed in at 146¾ four ounces under the welter limit, and they made an even fight of it until Wallace's great closing rally which earned him the decision.

Best blow of the evening was delivered a ready fight, that bothered Bland all the way. Braddock was long-breaking offensive in the closing rounds. Bland scored heavily in the first round, Wallace jumped into the fourth Wallace started to scare him off with hard rights, then Bland pushed back and forth, crashing right hand punches to the body.

Wallace forced the pace in the last two rounds, driving Bland about the ring to gain a decisive margin. He solved the Toronto boy's righthand lead by ducking across a hard right cross every time Bland tried it.

Frankie Martin of Montreal, former Canadian Bantamweight Champion, was knocked out in the semi-final bout by George Pace (Cyclone) Gilbert, Toronto, in a five-count in the first round, and Martin went down for good in the sixth round after their eight-round bout. Martin weighed 122 3-4 and Pace 118 3-4.

M. CALLAGHAN'S AFTER YOU WINS

Defeats Joka in 6 Minutes and 7 Seconds in Fast Race

Wednesday afternoon's punt races in the bay took on new interest for the scores of spectators on Victoria Park and opposite wharves yesterday due to the clever handling of the craft by respective skippers.

Winner of a hard fought battle Maurice Callaghan in his After You managed to cross the finish lines just six minutes and seven seconds over his rival Duke Smith in the Joka. Total time for the course was two hours fifteen minutes and fifteen seconds as registered by Captain Linnar Vice Commodore Ernest Baldree. Joka defeated the challenging Alaska, skipped by Harry Bennett by seven seconds, in one of the closest finishes yet registered.

Favored with a perfect start, the three boats in the heavy class were hampered in the first round which freshened later to permit of some excellent sailing. Skipper Callaghan during the first courses-leg-six minute time at 31 seconds in breaking spinnaker. She completed the first lap in the time of one hour.

Clever ship handling and sailor-like tactics by the "O" Class craft with the Rambler skipped by Bill Salsbury gave the course first for which no official time was kept. The "O" Class craft defeated the "Toots" owned by Salsbury by a fair margin. A disqualification was registered against the Scuteta owned by Rosebush, when she fouled the "Toots."

Today's column is contributed by George Laughlin, physical instructor at the Belleville Collegiate and supervisor of the Belleville Play grounds.

How great is the value of Playgrounds to the sport situation as I see it in Belleville?

There is only one place to begin any phase of sport, that is in youth. A boy or girl at the age of 6 is just ripe for training in organized lines of sport. They are just reaching that team age, having left behind the wild Indian stage. They are drifting from individual to cooperative games and the elements of skill and competition begin to appear. Therefore for psychological reasons alone this is the age to begin to teach boys and girls cooperative games.

That is what is being done in our Playgrounds. There is no athletic(y and sporting activities for boys and girls of all ages and all classes. They are not all the strenuous type of sports cited, because it is recognized that all cannot play the more strenuous sports, nor should play them. Our program therefore includes softball, baseball, tether ball, ping-pong, volley ball, horseshoes, jacks, checkers, lacrosse, track and field and stunts.

We have for each competitive sport, five classes, three for boys and two for girls. The midget boys are the smaller boys weighing 85 pounds and under. These are the boys up to eleven years old. The junior boys are those under 105 pounds and they are usually around 13 or 14 years of age. The senior class is composed of any boys under 18 years of age. The junior girls and senior girls have the same regulations as the junior and senior boys. All our leagues are well contested and bring quite a number into competition.

One of the results of all this activity should be a much greater source of material for Belleville's teams in various lines of sport.

Belleville never had better baseball material in the world, than during the years when baseball was played in the school yards. Where baseball Belleville is by leaps and bounds in baseball circles if it were not for the International and Inter-C.S.D.C.A. sponsored hockey league? The importance of this youth factor in sport is the reason for the leagues as is evidenced by the professional hockey schools and baseball farms which is attracting so much attention. Belleville's day in baseball will not be long before these youngsters who have learned baseball on the playgrounds will be bringing about a great baseball revival in Belleville, and they will bring a return of the day when Belleville was top in the baseball world.

This is not the only hope, of course. We also hope that the guidance and leadership on the playgrounds will turn out genuine sportsmen who can take a loss or a win with the same cheery grin. That is one of the finest things, as I see it today, the wonderful spirit existing on our playgrounds. In our leagues this year every game has been close and in most of the classes the leads are tied for point or very close to-gether. In no time during, or before or during the season have I noticed anything but the friendliest rivalry. This alone is worth all the money invested in our playgrounds. This is the type of thing which will send the name of Belleville round the world as a centre of clean sportsmanship. This is the type of thing which will be a great carry-over value in later life. A true sportsman is a straight shooter and that is the greatest national and social life; What greater gift could we hope for our boys and girls?

Then there is the value of this activity to the boy or girl individually. Participation in organized athletic activities tends to develop strong, healthy bodies. To see these youngsters running around the playgrounds in their abbreviated costumes, drinking the sunshine into their bodies, augurs well for the doctors in the future generation. We want our boys and girls to grow into life with strong bodies, well-developed and full of the zest of living.

There is another angle I would like to bring to your attention and that is the effect of our leadership and the guidance of the boys and girls. That is one of the prime reasons for our playgrounds. We try to get every boy and girl to take some part in the activity. In this we many are led to find themselves. That is, they discover that they are good at ping-pong or jacks or checkers and some game at the smaller boys weighing 85 pounds and under. These are the boys up to eleven years old. The junior boys are those under 105 pounds and they are usually around 13 or 14 years of age. The senior class is composed of any boys under 18 years of age. CHAPTER VII.

"It's safest to assume he knows me for a fool," Judith warned herself. Aloud she gave him the address of her apartment.

"Good!" exclaimed the young physician. "I was afraid it would be nearer the hospital—then that!" He pressed his foot from the accelerator, and Judith watched the speedometer needle hover between 30 and 35. "I'm a very careful driver," Harris added with a smile. "I don't believe in speeding—especially with a girl like you in the car."

Suddenly his manner changed. His voice lost its bantering lightness. "Look here, Miss Howard. You said you caused the accident because you weren't looking where you were going."

"That's right."

"It occurs to me that a pretty young woman should be out walking alone—ladies—with her head down even when she crossed the street. Something was troubling you. Would you want to tell me about it?"

Judith tried to evade the question with a laugh. "You're something more than a doctor, aren't you?"

"But you were troubled, weren't you?"

"Y-yes. . . ."

"Anything wrong at home?"

Judith shook her head. "I live alone in the apartment."

"Then it has to be a love affair." He turned to her with a grin. "That's elementary, my dear Miss Howard."

She wondered why she felt not the slightest resentment at his probing. There was no question but what this personable young doctor had the "bedside manner." Judith realized, too, that down in her heart she was ready enough to tell her story to someone. Someone beside Virginia Bent.

"You were right," she told Harris suddenly. "I was thinking about something else when I started to cross the street."

"And that 'something else' was a man, of course. I hope nothing serious has gone wrong."

"Well. . . . It's serious," Judith had to admit. He turned to her quickly and she added with a little laugh, "At least it's that."

"Oh. . . . You're not going to see him any more. Is that it?"

x x x

Judith was astonished. "How did you guess that?"

"It wasn't much of a guess. I knew very well that no man would be deciding not to see you any more." Carefully he threaded the car in and out among the thinning night traffic. "How did you happen—to make this momentous decision?"

"He—he didn't want to marry me."

This startled Eden Harris for a moment, but when he looked at another look at Judith's face he seemed relieved. "I get it. You're a young woman who plans to take full advantage of the fact that this is a leap year."

"No. . . . You see, Steve and I have known each other for a long time. More than four years, to be exact. I—I thought that was a little rounded for an engagement."

"I should think so! But what made this Steve so backward, I'd like to know."

Judith hesitated, then found herself confessing. "He didn't think he was making enough money to marry. I was willing to keep my job—wanted to, in fact. But Steve couldn't agree."

"Proud, eh?"

"Yes, and to me it seemed foolish, pitiful."

Harris did not answer for a moment. Then suddenly with one hand of the motor between them. Then: "When did all this happen?"

"I told him yesterday."

"Yesterday!" repeated the doctor incredulously. "You were speaking of it in the past tense, and I had no idea that—"

"It should be in the past tense," Judith told him. "But that's what I can't believe. He tried to see me tonight. I went to a movie to get away from him. Then when I came home he was waiting in the doorway. I'd turned down the street again when the accident happened." She studied his profile hoping that he would make some comment on what she'd told him. And when he offered none she could not refrain from asking, "Do you—well, do you think I was right, Doctor Harris?"

He thought a moment. "Yes, I'm sure I was. The conclusion I've past few years haven't been very conducive to young marriages. But when two people have been in love as long as you and this man it makes things difficult, to say the least. Yes, I think you were right in wanting him to meet conditions as they are. Personally, I see no harm in a wife working out of necessity. I believe in the unity and competent. Of course, later when there are children—" He broke off then, but by that time the husband in him to be making enough to support her."

x x x

Judith sighed with relief. "You don't know how good it is to hear you say that."

"Well," Harris laughed. "That's just a general statement, and I'm very poor judge as an expert." He looked down at her. "You're really quite ready to start in your vocation?"

"What makes you doubt it?"

"Because you're afraid to see him."

Judith nodded. "I'm—I'm afraid he'll convince me that we should just keep on going together and postpone marriage a little while longer. He's doing that so often. I suppose you think I'm weak."

"Not weak. It's just that you still love him," said Harris quietly.

"Yes. . . . " she admitted. "I still do."

Harris lapsed into silence, drove several blocks before he spoke again. And when he did release himself he had resumed his former manner. Reaching into his pocket, he drew out a pack of cigarettes. "Smoke?"

"Thanks." She accepted the light from his pocket torch, then raised her eyes to his, trying to match his mood. "Tell me, doctor, do you think time will cure me?"

"I don't know," he replied in mock professional manner. "Love is a curious disease. Time is the only treatment to which it responds—and you can't depend absolutely on that."

"But what was it Shakespeare said? 'Men have died. . . . but not for love.' It's never fatal!" nevertheless Judith's borrowed cynicism refused to ring true.

"I wouldn't say never fatal. Rarely fatal is more accurate. You're very young and—as I think I've said before—very pretty. Other men are going to fall in love with you. A great many. Especially now that you've given Steve the gate and the field is open. It's hard for you to believe now, but I think in six months or so that you'll run into someone you like better even than you liked Steve."

x x x

Yes, Judith agreed silently, it was hard to believe. So difficult, in fact, that she did not believe it at all. Steve was the man she had loved for years, and now the fact sure that he would one day be the only one, always and forever. Perhaps in time the hurt would quiet a little and the wound heal. She would be the soldier whose wounded straightens him often, but whose memory does not recall the pain, the field of battle, or the sword against the earth.

Suddenly her unhappy thoughts were interrupted by Eden Harris' genial, "Well, I think this is your place, isn't it?"

Judith nodded. "Yes. . . . and thanks so much for your kindness."

"Now that you're safely home I'll admit that I could have reached here in a much shorter time, but I just had a hunch that you had some things on your chest, and that you'd feel better if you could get them off."

"You're a nice person." Judith smiled sincerely. "Thanks again, and there's no need for you to get out. But I would like to know the name of the man who drove the car tonight. I'll want to see him before I leave."

"Francis Jarvis is his name. But you needn't worry about him. He'll be in his office tomorrow, as right as rain." As Judith opened the car door, Harris put out a restraining hand. "Not a word about whether you hope you'll see me again?"

Judith laughed. "I was never one to look up the rules. But doesn't Mrs. Post require that the lady be silent on that subject?"

"That may be. But there's nothing to prevent her showing it in her eyes."

Judith widened her eyes. "Well, what do they say?" she laughed.

"I can't tell. Those are enigmatic eyes, Judith Howard. But I hope we'll see each other again."

"So do I, really, Doctor Harris."

"And the way to manage it is for me to come and call on you. MAY I?"

"Of course. Good night. . . ."

CHAPTER VIII.

Next morning Judith Howard telephoned the hospital soon after she had come to work.

"How is Mr. Francis Jarvis, please?"

There was a moment's wait while the operator consulted her card file. Then: "Mr. Jarvis was discharged early this morning. His injuries were very slight."

But Judith's conscience wouldn't let it go at that. She realized she had been the indirect cause of the man's accident, and she wanted him to know she was ready to accept a certain responsibility. In the telephone directory she found Jarvis' office number beneath that of his home number. Deciding that it would be better to see him personally than to try to explain matters over the telephone, she obtained permission to take an hour off.

When she had reached the offices of Francis Jarvis she was due for a surprise. They were luxurious business quarters, indeed, and she quickly discovered that he bore the name of Francis Jarvis was important. Of course—she had realized that his automobile had been no small model—but nowadays even the moderately priced cars drive more than eight cylinders.

The girl in the white-panelled reception room regarded Judith with polite suspicion. "What do you wish ot see Mr. Jarvis about? Perhaps Mr. Pomeroy, his assistant could be of service to you."

"I'm afraid not. You see, Mr. Jarvis was injured slightly in an automobile accident last night—and I was responsible."

"I see. Just a moment, please." Expertly the girl plugged in. And apparently Jarvis was guarded by still another young woman. "Please tell Mr. Jarvis that a Miss Howard is here to see him. It's with regard to a—an automobile accident last night." There was a moment's silence, after which the switchboard operator told Judith, "Please go right in." She nodded toward a beautifully figured walnut door.

Hesitatingly, Judith entered. It stepped onto a deep, soft carpet. At the other end of the good-sized room was a broad, flat desk which held nothing more than a green blotter pad and an ornate pen set. Behind it at a man of middle-age, slender, a bit florid. His dark eyes were younger than his face, but when he smiled—as he did now—his face complemented the eyes, and he seemed to drop five or six years.

"Miss Howard?" he said. "Won't you please sit down?"

x x x

Judith thanked him, choosing the nearest leather-cushioned chair. Suddenly it occurred to her how absurd it was for her to be offering this man responsibility for the accident. Obviously he could afford almost any given number of such mishaps.

"You wanted to see me about last night's little accident?" With a smile Jarvis touched the side of his head where a broad patch of white tape covered his dark hair. "You're not by any chance that very preoccupied young woman who caused me to swerve into my unyielding fire hydrant?"

"I'm afraid so," Judith said. "I came to tell you how sorry I am—and to assure you that I feel quite responsible for any damage."

His eyes widened, and for a moment he looked as if he believed Judith might be attempting to somehow trick him. But when Judith's guileless expression assured him that she was sincere, he broke into a pleasant laugh. "Well, I'm—refreshing!" He got up, went to a sideboard. "Would you care for something? Judith shook her head. "Mind if I do?"

"Not at all. I—" she started to rise from the chair. "I'll leave you my name and address, and then if anything comes up you can get in touch with me."

He looked at her curiously. "Just what do you propose?"

"Why, there's the damage to the car, but I imagine that's covered by insurance. I was thinking mostly of your injury. Sometimes those things appear to be all right, and then later on they develop into something grievous."

Jarvis laughed, and tossed down the contents of a small glass, followed it with neither water nor soda. "I hardly think this one will. Re returned to his chair. "But, as you suggest, I'll take your name and address, just in case anything should develop."

Judith resented his apparent mild amusement. Getting to her feet she said, "Of course I didn't think that you—" Suddenly she might be, and—"

"Oh, please don't think I don't appreciate your thoughtfulness." He laughed pleasantly. "The bond business hasn't been quite as good as it might be, you know. I may hold you reponsible, at that!"

"That would be fair enough," Judith said, and gave him her address and telephone number.

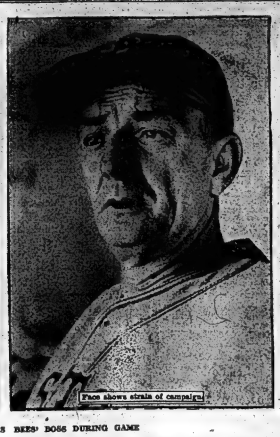
RUFFING'S HU RLING CARRYING TANKS TOWARD PENNANT

After reporting for duty to the New York Yankees almost a month after the 1937 season had commenced, Charlie "Red" Ruffing has won 15 games and lost 3 to date this season. That record in itself is enough, but there is more to his amazing work than that. After reporting late he had not time to let the warm Florida sun take the kinks out of his pitching arm; there had been no jaunts around the field to prepare his legs for long hard months ahead. When he finally came to terms with Colonel Jake Ruppert he only had a pitchers glove and a possible pitching arm, now he still has the arm and 15 victories under his belt. Ruffing, who has been carrying the Yanks to another possible pennant, does not only win his games through pitching, he can also wield the old willow in the pinches. Many times when the game is on the fire Manager Joe McCarthy will beckon big "Red" to the box as a pinch-hitter, and often he wins ball games in that capacity. He is seen here in three different poses, as a pitcher, batter and himself.



FLOGGED MAN

The flogging of Oscar Kay, 47, by 17-year-old Zedas Willis (ABOVE), smiling with satisfaction after wielding the lash, over an accusation that he told "lies" about her, led to an assault charge against the girl and a slander charge against Kay. Mr. Kay, a WPA worker, was tied to a tree and beaten in the presence of a crowd of onlookers in the girl's front yard at New Orleans, La. Kay formally charged Miss Willis and her father, Alfred C. Willis, 56, with assaulting and beating him. Assistant District Attorney Sidney A. Mitchell then charged Kay with slander.

CANDID CAMERA CATCHES BEES' BOSS DURING GAME

Through big ball club still is in the second division, Manager Bill McKechnie, of the Boston Bees, is credited with bringing about the most marked improvement shown by a National league club this season. The Bees are buzzing at the door of the first division, with a pitching staff bolstered by minor league veterans. Manager McKechnie is studied by the candid camera during the course of a game.

THREATENS SUIT

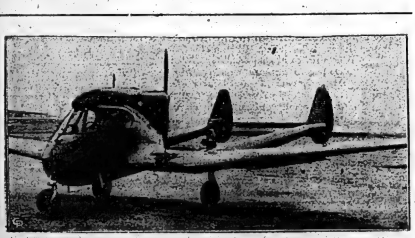
Claiming she lost her job because of the asserted influence exerted against her by her former friend screen star Joan Crawford, Dorothy Rogers (ABOVE), former RKO studio stenographer, announced through her attorney, she would sue Miss Crawford for $50,000 damages.

COMMON SORROW— MISSING AVIATORS

Visiting California, Lady Mary Kingsford-Smith, right, widow of the Australian flier, Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, who was lost without a trace in a Malaysian jungle, meets another aviation widow, Mrs. Mary Beatrice Noonan, whose husband, Fred, was navigator for Amelia Earhart Putnam on her attempted round-the-world flight. Both are seen participating in ceremonies at Oakland, where a plaque has been set up in memory of Kingsford-Smith.

THESE LADS ARE "BA BES IN ARMS" IN JAPAN

In common with war-conscious European nations, Japan is looking to the future success of her empire-building program by making the children of today the warriors of tomorrow. Here you see a small part of the huge army of Japanese boys who are being trained at Tokio to take up arms for the empire when needed. This section is in the preliminary stage of training. Later the staffs they carry now will be replaced with rifles.

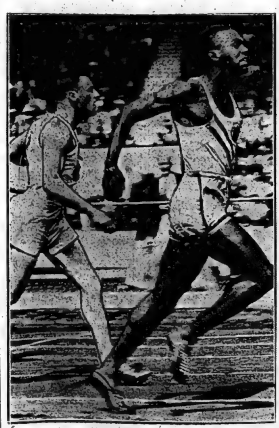


JOHN BULL OPENS HIS NEW NAVAL SHOW TO THE PUBLIC

An insight into Britannia's sea power is given the public during navy week at Plymouth, England. The British tars on the H. M. S. Drake are firing a sleek, new type torpedo as they uncover scene of their newer martial trumps. Notice the rope attached to the torpedo. The sailors retrieve it after each demonstration.

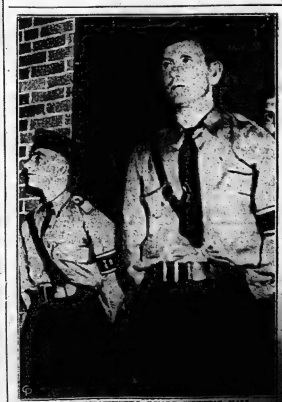
SOLD TO DODGERS

New York Giants of the National League have sold Ben Cantwell, ABOVE, right-hand pitcher with the club, to the desperate Brooklyn Dodgers. Cantwell served most of Cubs' attack as they head into the International League but was recalled by the Giants several weeks ago.



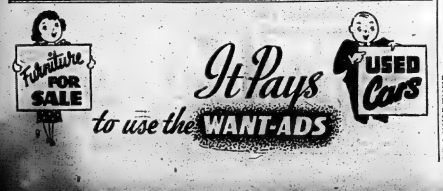
"GRASSHOPPER" AEROPLANE BEING TESTED AT NEW YORK

Still another new type of aeroplane is being tested in order to find one combining safety with excellent flying ability. The one shown (above) has been undergoing tests at Roosevelt Field, New York. Built by Stearman-Hammond of San Francisco, it is of unusual design, resembling a gigantic grasshopper and has an additional third wheel at the front.



WILL DEFEND TITLE

When the Quebec open championships commence over the suburban Marlborough course at Montreal, Bobby Alstin, of Ottawa, will be battling against old man par to try and retain the title he won last year. Bobby is the only Ottawa pro on the entry list and he will undoubtedly endeavor to bring the title back to the capital and so add another victory to his 1937 list of laurels.



JOHNSON WINS ANOTHER DASH IN ENGLAND

Ben Johnson, former star of the Columbia University team of New York, is seen here breaking the tape, a winner of the 100-yard dash at White City stadium, London, Eng. Johnson went on to score the only doubls victory of the meet by winning the 220-yard dash. The U. S. trailed Britain in the final team standing 41-32. C. B. Holmes of Great Britain is seen finishing second here. In the second meet competed in by this travelling U.S. track and field team, at Brussels, Johnson won the 100 metres race.

NAZI SYMPATHIZERS GUARD MEETING HALL

Crowds of labor unionists and sympathizers picketed German-American hall in Kenosha, Wisconsin, as 800 members of the German-American Volksbund met in what opponents termed the first Nazi demonstration in the United States. Letters to the Editor

C. N. R. REVENUE UP

Editor of Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,

On a tour of inspection, the president of the Canadian National Railways, R. J. Hungerford said when addressing the Vancouver Board of Trade, August 5th, that the operating revenues of the C.N.R. for the first seven months of 1937 have been $10,000,000 more than in the same period last year. He also estimated that the net operating revenue had been about $4,500,000 above the corresponding period of 1936. It should be very encouraging to the taxpayers, the owners of the C.N.R. Especially to those who are doing a little thinking and realize that the net operating revenue of $4,500,000 is partly due to their using their own road and as time goes on we shall have more of these increases. The more the C.N.R. is patronized the more the C.N.R. deficit will be cut down.

D. S. LA RUE.

WHY GO ABOUT WITH THE BLUES?

You Need Not

IT IS NEEDLESS for you to go about with "The Blues", tired, run-down, listless, irritable, thin and scrawny, perhaps with a cloudy complexion. Do as millions of others like you have done. Take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills; soon you will be thrilled as the tiredness leaves you, as you regain your normal weight — your complexion clears, and you revel again in glowing health.

A lack of sufficient iron in your blood is probably what is robbing you of your birthright of good health. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were originated by a Canadian physician for the very purpose of supplying this essential iron. Iron salts, together with the other blood-enriching tonics which abound in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, build rich red blood which carries nourishment and tissue-building properties to all parts of your body without creating unwelcome fat.

Read the convincing proof of our statements: Over 150 men and women of various ages recently took a regular treatment of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills under the supervision of experts, who scientifically tested their blood before, during and after the treatment. All persons showed a striking improvement in blood condition and in their general health, vigor and well-being. If Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, after a fair trial, do not do the same for you, your money will be refunded.

Start the Dr. Williams' Pink Pills treatment today. Take them regularly as directed on the package. Soon "The Blues" will leave you. You will be normal and happy again.

Fifty cents at all druggists in a smart, new container that looks just like a costly compact.

Around the Corner

By Viro Stingel Eldridge
Allara Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

It was one of those rare spring days that impels small boys to dawdle a-s-l-o-w the roadside wishing for a fish-pole to dangle over the river; a day that impels older people to decide ailing life's highway wishing for a magic rod to dangle over the pool of the unknown, and so fish out a satisfying adventure or two.

Doris Sedgwick was finding life tasteless and humdrum. Today she slashing the lunch dishes in the pantry, closed the door firmly on this evidence of her unusual feelings, changed her frock, and went out into the golden sunshine.

Doris decided to go to the picture. For two hours she could be the heroine in as romantic an adventure as would satisfy any woman's soul.

The picture happened to be one of fine beauty and delicate romance; an epic of noble lives, favored with love, devotion and courage.

As she emerged to the sidewalk a wistful sight escaped her. "Ah, but life is never like that. In reality, quarrels, greed, selfishness thwart everything; where would we find such romance, such devotion, such love, such courage?"

Half resentfully she brought herself back to earth, remembering that she had to get something for supper. Why did one have to think of food, when one wanted adventure?

The beautiful day was over; Doris caught her coat about her, as, beyond the shops, the full force of a gale struck her.

The deafening shriek of the fire whistle smote her ears.

Shivering back against a building she watched as, with clang of bells and howling of sirens, the engines swept by. She became one of the crowd hurrying after the engines, on—on—around the corner.

Oh! Oh! In that wooden factory. And the workers not yet out!"

Smoke and flames were pouring from the second floor; frightened faces were at the upper windows.

Already the men had their ladders up.

A small car, with a girl at the wheel, came to a grinding halt in front of Doris. Springing out, a young man turned to catch the girl's hand hard in his, caught the flower that she snatched from her coat, and thrust it into his breast pocket as he ran throwing on his rubber coat and hat, he entered the fight.

Steadily, efficiently, the firemen were helping workers down the ladders. The fire, fanned by the high wind, was gaining headway. A red glow outlined a fireman high on a ladder. A sharp report, bursting flames, a moment of sick expectancy, a gasp of horror sweeping the crowd, Doris closed her eyes; she tried not to distinguish the murmur nor sense the ambulance driving up.

Shudderingly, she saw another fireman running up the ladder, somehow the danger to the fireman excluded the thought of the people inside; they were horribly trapped, yes, but these men deliberately left safety to go up into that inferno.

The crowd was whispering of a tragedy; a group of girls were missing.

The evil wall was crumbling, horse commands that the ladder be shifted, a breathless, coat-less, a silvery badge flashing at his waist, a man tore through the crowd and up the ladder.

Doris glimpsed his set face as he rushed past. A fireman, one of her neighbors; his daughter was a stenographer here. Well, he had gone to his death, Doris thought.

Weakly she dropped to a doorstep, beside a fat man who was shaking with excitement, a proud smile on his tear-wet face. "See that boy," he demanded, his eyes never leaving the figure of a slate-wart young fireman perched precariously on a lanky roof, "that's my boy, my Joey. Finest man in the department. Yessir."

Doris agreed wholeheartedly.

The weather had become piercingly cold. Water from where it fell, making the firemen's work doubly hazardous.

A about of acclaim went up from a group on the other side of the fire. The man who had run past, up the ladder, had appeared with the girls at a top floor window. They were quickly brought to safety.

The fire was well under control, and the workers all rescued, when, with a fountain of sparks, the roof fell in.

Sharp, shouted orders by the chief, firemen scaling ladders against unstable walls. Two of the men had gone down. A human rope was formed; ready volunteers went into the mass of scarching, falling timbers to rescue their comrades.

Miraculously, beyond scratches and bruises, the men were brought safe again, one turned for a moment to the crowd; tall as he was, his eyes swept over the faces, seeking—his sweetheart?—his wife? Ah, yes. A sweet-faced woman waved her hand, a shaky smile trembled for just a moment on her strained white face; the look of intense love and admiration she seen him was satisfying in the extreme.

Doris turned to go home, feeling that she had lived through years of adventure. Romance? Devotion? Love? Courage? Boundless! Immeasurable!

Cabinet Present At Nomination Of M. F. Hepburn

St. Thomas, Aug. 13.—(CP)—In battle array, most of the entire Ontario Cabinet will be lined up behind Premier Mitchell Hepburn here tonight when he unofficially opens the provincial Liberal election campaign at his own constituency meeting.

Despite unfavorable weather, plans were completed for a rally of thousands of Liberal supporters from Western London and attracting Liberal leaders from all Southern Ontario.

While the Premier yesterday spoke briefly at four functions in various parts of his Elgin County riding, party stalwarts here expected an address of more importance tonight—but hesitated to venture a guess as to his line of attack.

Whether election date itself would be announced remained in doubt, some feeling that since the Conservatives already have their campaign under way the Hepburn would no longer feel bound by any understanding to give them more than the four-to-five days required in the filing the election writs.

Wilson H. Mills, member of Parliament for Elgin County Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, provincial Minister of Health and Hon. Harry C. Nixon provincial Secretary, will also address tonight's meeting.

Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Lands and Forests, Hon. Arthur Roebuc. Attorney-General and Minister of Mines, Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways; Hon. Dr. L. J. Simpson, Minister of Education and Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, will speak only briefly. Then nominations will be called, with Mr. Hepburn speaking in reply.

Lies Unconscious In Rowboat on Lake All Night Through

Kingsville, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP)—Seized with a heart attack and unconscious the greater part of the night in a flimsy rowboat, P. N. McAllister, Toronto, thanked his lucky stars today that Lake Erie was almost a dead calm at the time.

McAllister, travelling representative of a tobacco company, rented a rowboat intending to take a short ride. Rowing proved too much of an exertion and he was seized with a heart attack 100 yards from shore.

He lost consciousness and when he awoke several hours later it was dark and he had no idea how far the boat had drifted. He was too weak to row and lay in the bottom of the craft. When daylight came he distinguished the Kingsville shore line some miles away and managed to row to shore.

MARKET COMMENT

The market has been a spotty affair during the last few weeks but urgent liquidation has not been noticeable. Several securities have moved against the general drift of trend and in each case there was some definite reason to account for the public interest.

The newsprint stocks are again coming in for demand, with London & Hamilton leader in the buying. We are approaching the time when the "call" will be put on for newsprint with the impression that for the second half of next year, an even higher quotation will prevail. Although increased operating expenses will reduce profits, a price of $50 per ton for newsprint should result in better earnings for the Canadian companies and the best results since 1931 are looked for.

Another group of securities that has been in somewhat better demand under the leadership of Montreal Power and Shawinigan is the "power" list. Industrial was the first to recover from the depression and as far back as 1930 was creating new records in output. With increased industrial activity in many lines throughout the Dominion it is apparent that the public utility industry is in for decidedly improved earnings. Two of the outstanding securities in the group are Shawinigan and Montreal Power.

One of the best signs of returning prosperity is the gain in the amount of dividends paid by Canadian Corporations. Canadian dividend payments continue to reflect improving general conditions in disbursements for the month of July, at a total of $28,217,121 was 12.8 percent greater than the total of $25,064,089 reported for the same month of 1936, and 68.2 percent ahead of the total of $18,902,-986 for July 1935. For the first seven months of the current year dividend disbursements by Canadian companies amounted to $167,808,020 compared with $144,860,221 for similar months of the previous year, and $124,851,225 for the like period of 1935, increases of 15.9 percent and 34.4 percent respectively.

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 12. — Egg prices were again easier on the local market yesterday. The recent advance in prices and the hot weather have cut down consumption. Fancy Creamery Butter was stronger, responsive to the Ottawa report on stocks and production. Receipts were 944 cases of eggs, 30 boxes of cheese and 2276 boxes of butter, excluding truck arrivals.

Sales at the Canadian Commodity Exchange were 200 boxes of Quebec No. 1 and No. 2 cheese at 26¼c, with the close quoted at 26¼c to 26½c.

The open market was 26¾c to 27c. At the weekly auction 2,337 boxes were offered, with the No. 1 Quebec white selling at 13¾c and the No. 1 Quebec colored bringing 13 13/16c. Ontario cheese was quoted 26½c to 14½c.

On the egg market graded shipping stock in five cases sold at 27-27½c for A-large, 25-25½c for A-medium, 22-24c for 2 and 20c for C. Offerings at the Commodity Exchange were 27c, 23c, 22c and 20c respectively.

The potato market was 50-50c for No. 1 and 35c for the No. 2, new Quebec stock, per 80-lb. bags.

Livestock

Toronto, Aug. 12—(CP)—Volume of trade was moderate on the cattle livestock market today with prices on all divisions but hogs remaining steady. A decline in hog prices was established early in the day. Cattle receipts numbered approximately 1,000 head.

Receipts reported by the Dominion Livestock Branch were: Cattle 360; calves 80; hogs 390; sheep and lambs nil.

Bulk of the sales on the cattle market were made up of steers with common to medium butchers sold at $7.25 to $8.75. Some plain light steers and heifers went as honors at $2.50 to $3.00. Good cows traded at $2.25 to $2.50 and bologna bulls at $3 to $3.50.

The few veal calves offered brought steady prices of $9 to $9.50 for good down to $7 for plain.

Previous close of off-truck basis hogs was $17.25 to $17.35.

Lambs sold steady at yesterday's lower price of $9 for good ewes and wethers. Culls were priced from $7.50 to $8. Majority of the sales was to small killers. Sheep were at $1.50 to culls up to $4 for good light ewes.

WALL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 13.—(CP)— Selling by large forces of liquidation in the stock market today and favorable shares stabbed forward fractions to a point or more.

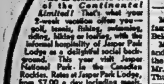
The pace slowed after an active opening only to be resumed later in the session. Realization was apparently easily absorbed near the final hour.

Trading was at the rate of approximately 750,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE Close

Toronto, Aug. 13—(CP)—The gold shares came to life this afternoon and staged their best display of strength in some weeks, trading heavily at times. Leaders, such as Senbors, Lake Shore and Dome led the parade and the secondary and junior issues were close up in the action. Industrials also were strong with gains on the whole while the base metals and the western-oils lagged although the latter shares witnessed a lightening up of the oils.

The more in the yellow metal issues appeared to have the most news basis and brokers were inclined to credit the buying to feeling that the traders that recent firmness of prices suggested higher times in the offing. Lake Shore and Dome were taken in considerable quantity as gains of 1 to 2 points while McIntyre added nearly a point and Hollinger a minor fraction.



In the secondary group trade was heavy in Bidgood, Pickle Crow, Teck Hughes, Wright Hargreaves, Sylvanite, Little Long Lac, Mosher, Central Patricia and Con Pirate, all at gains of 15 to 30 cents each. Some secondary and junior golds up 5 to 10 cents included Fanmour, Coniagas, Beattie, Aquarius, Consolidated Chibougamau, Cariboo, Rockcrest, Bankfield, Bobjo, Hasaga, Sudbury Basin, Bonetal, Preston East Dome, Sudbury Contact, Rockwin, Bellekeno, Bonville, Bralorne, Pioneer, Lebel Oro, Kirkland Townsite, Kirkland Lake Gold, Kirkland Lake Con, Kirkland Lake Base, Kirkland Lake Amalgamated, Kirkland Lake Anglo, Kirkland Lake Amulet, Kirkland Lake Bidgood, Kirkland Lake Beaver, Kirkland Lake Bankfield, Kirkland Lake Arntfield, Kirkland Lake Argosy, Kirkland Lake Anglo Huronian

Us fellows was sitting on my front steps, including Herbi Kline the new little kid from down in the next block, and Sid Hunt said to Shorty Judge, O, Shorty, imagine, being the shortest kind around here all these years and then having another guy move in just your age and still shorter.

Moaning Herbi Kline, and Shorty Judge said, Well what of it, I got tired being the shortest and decided to just leave myself go, but when I was 2 years old I was as short everybody thought my mother was pushing a doll in the baby carriage.

Well what that amount to? Herbi Kline said. Holey smokes when I was 2 years old everybody thought I was a puppy, thats how short I was, he said.

Being a good sport, and Shorty said, Well even when I was 4 I was so short I had to sit on 3 dictionaries and a pillow and the Sunday newspaper when I ate my meals.

Thats nothing, Herbi said. Do you know what I has to do when I was 4? he said, and Shorty said, No and I dont believe it even without knowing.

No wonder you dont, because nobody didn't even hardly believe me when I was 4, Herbi said. I was so short when I was 4 I couldn't anywheres near reach the soda fountain counter when I got a ice cream soda, so they had to put 2 soda fountain stools on top of each other and put me on top of the top one and then I could just reach the top of the straws in the soda. Can you beat me anything you ever did shorter than that? he said.

Shorty not looking as if he could, and just then some more fellows came up and we got up a game of G men and racketers, so he didn't even have to try.

SKIRMISHING REPORTED ABOUT SHANGHAI

7,000 Jap 'Thousands' of Chinese Battle in Chinese Areas

Bluejackets Are Reinforced

Artillery Duel Sets Fire to Parts of Chinese Zone

WHARF BURNS

Chinese Peace Mission And Japanese Officer Killed at Airport

An estimated 7,000 Japanese bluejackets and "thousands" of Chinese regular army troops are skirmishing in Chinese areas north of the Shanghai international zone. A Chinese and Japanese artillery duel set fire to a Chinese wharf north of the main city.

The skirmishes started early today after a "peace" conference failed. Japanese said Chinese violated terms of the 1932 Shanghai truce by sending troops into Shanghai. Chinese blamed Japanese "aggression", citing the concentration of more than one Japanese warships at Shanghai wharves and the landing of many bluejackets.

At Swords' Points.

Chinese and Japanese have been at swords points in Shanghai since July 7 when fighting broke out in Northern Hopeh Province. Tension increased when the Japanese army drove out the Chinese soldiers and took control of the province and the cities of Peiping and Tientsin.

It reached a climax at Shanghai when a Chinese Peace Preservation Corps machine gun killed a Japanese officer and seaman were killed in an encounter between the two at West Shanghai Chinese airport. Soon the Japanese warships arrived and landed reinforcements. Then, yesterday, the Chinese regulars started pouring into the city from the north. It was not known who fired the first shots today.

Shanghai is a city of nearly 3,800,000 including 60,000 foreigners.

CHILD STILL SERIOUS

Criminal Negligence In Shooting Case

Little Current, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP)—Clifford Gilbow, Windsor, Ont., and Charles McDonald, Meldrum Bay, will appear before Judge A. B. Currey at Gore Bay, Aug. 23 in connection with the fatal shooting while deer hunting, of L. H. Spence, District Relief Administrator of Sudbury, Nov. 17, 1936.

Spence was formerly a member of the Criminal Investigation Branch of the Ontario Provincial Police and was on Manitoulin Island on business when he met a party of Windsor friends. He joined them in a day's shooting.

While guarding a deer runway during the hunt, Spence was struck in the chest by a bullet after two shots were fired Gilbow and McDonald. They are charged with criminal negligence.

SAY FALSE TALE RELATED BY MAN AT MASS MEETING

Police Claim Harvey Murphy Said Girl Hurt by Tear Gas

MURPHY ARRESTED

Police State Girl Had Been Treated For Skin Disorder

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 13 (CP)—Harvey Murphy of Toronto, President of the Ontario Federation of Unemployed, was arrested today by police on a warrant charging him with publishing false news at a mass meeting here last night.

Murphy, police said, was charged with publishing "false news, or a tale" namely that Irene Reid had been injured in the face by tear gas," said to have been released by police during Tuesday's battle between officers and strikers.

Chief Marshall said the girl was exhibited on a public platform by Murphy at the meeting "to support police brutality".

Police said they investigated and found that the girl had been treated for some time for a skin disorder. She appeared on the platform, they said, with her head and face heavily swathed in bandages.

Murphy will be arraigned tomorrow.

DAVID CROLL IS NOMINATED

Proclaims He is Still Liberal Accepting Nomination

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 13 (CP) David Croll, former Minister of Welfare, Municipal Affairs and Labor in the Ontario cabinet because of disagreement with Premier Hepburn's policy on the British General Motors strike, has the unanimous acclamation of the Liberal Walkerville constituency Liberals as their candidate in the forthcoming provincial election.

"Warm-hearted, generous and courteous" were the words used by Mr. Croll to describe the premier last night as he accepted the nomination at a Liberal meeting. He described Mr. Hepburn's policy at the time he resigned the cabinet to "poor advice". The general record of the Hepburn administration, Mr. Croll said, apart from labor policies, was praiseworthy.

He spoke while the premier was opening the Liberal campaign at St. Thomas last night. Mr. Croll will stand on the issue which brought about the split with his former Labor Minister, Hon. Arthur Roebuck, K.C., former Attorney-General, in Ontario cabinet circles still was a Liberal and questioned whether the former leader's policy represented true Liberalism.

Until the Oshawa strike last spring, Labor in Ontario was left to its own choice and to picket peacefully had not been considered a crime in this country for a generation, Mr. Croll said. These rights are "fundamental and paramount", he said, and he had no alternative but to resign.

Here is the premier's right, the former minister added, to ask for his resignation. "Though he disagreed with Mr. Hepburn on the labor question, Mr. Croll said, "I want you to know that I am not adding to the adverse to the principle of shot-gun Liberalism now being forced upon the country or the party; because it smacks of Conservatism."

He asked workers to join issues "for your financial good". Either the government will legislate on wages or hours or the people will have to do it for themselves, he said, "and the only way they can do it is through unions." He said he was on the side of the strikers in the Windsor, Cornwall and Peterborough textile industry disputes.

The financial record of the Hepburn administration was commended particularly in regard to collection of taxes, Mr. Croll said, adding that administrations had not done their duty in this respect, he said.

Hon. Earl Rowe Defines Conservative Labor Stand

Toronto, Aug. 13 (CP)—The campaign committee of the Ontario Conservative Party today issued a statement on the party's attitude towards labor.

"The national policy of the Liberal-Conservative Party, Provincial and Dominion, for many years has been to create industry for the purpose of providing steady and wages for labor and a profitable home market for the farmer, the lumberman and other primary producers. The Party's sympathetic attitude towards labor is evidenced by the Social legislation on our statute books.

"The Liberal-Conservative Party believes that labor should receive a fair share of the fruits of industry and is entitled to organize to improve the lot of the worker as regards wages, hours, security in old age and all other conditions of industrial life.

"The Liberal-Conservative Party reaffirms its traditional policy of insisting upon the maintenance of law and order in all industrial disputes and pledges itself firmly if not scrupulously to uphold the laws of Canada.

The Liberal-Conservative Party stands for the following:

"1. The right of employees to bargain collectively through their own representatives chosen without intimidation, coercion or intimidation.

"2. It is and has for many decades been a fact that both capital and labor are International in their organization. Accordingly the right of the worker to belong to the union of his choosing, Canadian or International, is one of our industrial, is fully established; provided always that such union does not observe in all their actions the laws of Canada.

"3. The Liberal-Conservative Party is unalterably opposed to the introduction into Ontario of sit-down strikes, sabotage or other violations of our law, and for the purpose of clarify hereby places itself on record as being opposed to such illegalities whether they are introduced by Legitimate labor unions affiliated with the C.I.O., the A.F. of L. or any other organization, capital or labor.

"4. That representatives from other countries, both of capital and labor, shall be subject on the same principles as other people to our immigration laws and that they shall when admitted to this country strictly observe the laws of the land.

"5. The primary function of the state in all industrial disputes is FIRST—to take no side and to maintain law and order without the slightest degree of unnecessary or provocative force, and SECOND to enact and impartially administer reasonable legislation for the conciliation of industrial disputes.

"6. The right to work in Canada is not dependent upon membership in any organization.

"7. That no strike shall take place until all reasonable methods of conciliation are exhausted and the worker should have the right of secret ballot free from improper influence or coercion in all decisions affecting the dispute.

"8. The Liberal-Conservative Party will continue in the future as in the past to defend the principle of freedom of association within the law. The Party reaffirms its belief that the essence of democracy is trust in the people and to rely on freedom and not on dictatorship, that public opinion is the force that rules and that the greatest safeguard of orderly progress and welfare is a sound common sense of all classes of the Canadian people."

Senate Approves The Nomination

Washington, Aug. 13—(AP)— A Senate Judiciary Committee swiftly approved today the confirmation of Senator Black (D.-Ala.) to the U.S. Supreme Court.

It acted only minutes after President Roosevelt and Senate Conference Attorney-General Cummings had informed him that it is the opinion of the Senate Committee to appoint the Alabama Senator to the Supreme Court.

The Judiciary Committee of six Democrats voted to report Black's nomination favorably, after rejecting a move by Senator Austin (R.-Vt.) to hold up action pending study of legal questions involved.

Black's eligibility had been questioned by some Senators in view of the fact he voted for President Roosevelt Court Reitring Bill permitting Justices to leave the bench at full pay.

Liberal Party Platform Is Outlined by Hepburn Announcing Fall Election

Exact Date Not Given as Premier Nominated at St. Thomas

CABINET PRESENT

C. I. O. to be Foremost Issue in Campaign Says Premier

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 13 (CP)—Exact date of a provincial election remained a mystery today, but the people of Ontario had the word of Premier Mitchell Hepburn it would be held "in a short time". They also had the premier's statement that his stand against the C.I.O. would be a foremost issue in the forthcoming battle.

Nominated for re-election in his own riding, the premier was acclaimed by two thousand Western Ontario Liberals in conventions at Finlayson Park here last night. With only Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Mines, absent, the Ontario cabinet supported the Liberal leader on the platform.

New issues, said Mr. Hepburn, had arisen that made an early election desirable. One of these was a "well-known Lewis invasion such as is now putting a hand in Ontario workmen's pay envelopes". He referred to Hon. L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, as "that international millionaire", part of whose "annual income of $36,000,000 comes from Canada".

Probably October 18.

Referring to Hon. Earl Rowe, Conservative leader, Premier Hepburn said Ontario would "in a short time" be given the opportunity of going to the polls "to choose between one who had balanced the budget and one who had never had an idea". He did not amplify his election announcement.

(The Toronto Globe and Mail in its report of his address, however, said that although Mr. Hepburn did not name the actual date of the election, "it is learned on excellent authority" October 19 is the "latest date" possible for the ballot. The paper added that the Ontario cabinet was said to be considering three dates.)

Mr. Hepburn declared that personal attacks had been made upon him though the province as a whole returned a Liberal government, would retire when it thought fit. Whenever he said, retire to his Yarmouth farm, Nova Scotia, would be the people of Elgin repudiate him at the polls.

Reiterated His Stand.

Besides the C.I.O. issue, the Liberal leader reiterated his stand against the "Moscowed power bureau" and defended Hydro contract cancellations. Many people in the municipalities made by the succession duties legislation, he said, would be glad to put $23,000,000 in two years into the provincial treasury.

Repeated challenges by Conservative leader Rowe on these major issues had led him to review his previously-announced decision that his government would not go to the country until after another session of the present legislature. Mr. Hepburn said. The people were therefore be given an early opportunity to speak on these matters.

Yesterday was also the premier's 51st birthday and he and Mrs. Hepburn were honored by presentations on behalf of Mr. Hepburn's constituents. Mr. Heenan was on a Northern Ontario tour, but brief addresses were given by Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Health; Hon. Harry Nixon, Provincial Secretary; Hon. Paul Leduc, Minister of Health; Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways; Hon. Dr. L. J. Simpson, Minister of Reforestation; and Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture.

Challenged is Rescind.

In opening, Premier Hepburn referred to a statement attributed to his recently-nominated Conservative opponent, Norman Martin, Elgin dairy farmer, that the government had fa'vored Algoma Steel in putting a bounty on beneficiated iron ore.

The premier challenged Mr. Martin to say he would rescind that piece of legislation. Not a single Conservative had voted against the iron ore bounty, he said.

Of Mr. Rowe, the speaker said he had been a member of the Bennett government, "the worst administration in Canada since Confederation." Mr. Rowe had said, Mr. Hepburn said, that the "intestinal fortitude" to find out what Ontario thought of him.

"I would like to find out what the people think of Mr. Rowe," Mr. Hepburn declared.

The Premier took credit for reducing interest rates, balancing the budget, reducing taxes and now taking over the entire cost of provincial highways. New timber policies had jumped revenue and practically eliminated unemployment in Northern Ontario (in Temiskaming and Northern Ontario was now paying the war; Niagara Parks Commission debt had been reduced by $1,000,000.

Reviewing work of the succession duties branch, he claimed there were 44 other states and cities in which $60,000,000 was owing in addition to the $20,000,000 collected in the past two years. Collections had made the department the greatest revenue producer in the government.

Stalling For Time is Charge

Conservatives, he charged, were not in the legislature to take on the inquiries. Estates, he said, were stalling for time in the hope the Conservatives would be elected as "Mr. Rowe's hands are tied before he starts."

Referring to John L. Lewis as "Mr. Rowe's friend", Mr. Hepburn said that in 1934 a C.I.O. drive was involved in "The Herrin, Ill., massacre" in which 19 non-union miners wanting to join a union of their own choice were lined up and shot. Mr. Lewis was head of the United Mine Workers' Union.

Mr. Hepburn quoted a statement he said Homer Martin, President of the United Automobile Workers of America, made to a gathering of workers of the Douglas Aircraft Company, Los Angeles, which as saying: "I'd hate awful bad to lose the Ontario market but I never have thought he was getting a bad deal from his employer."

Mr. Hepburn said there could be nothing more cold-blooded in the way of suggestion than what Martin had packed into his statement. Mr. Rowe entered a eulogium of the address of the Ontario Chairman if he thought any one of them would accept the suggestion of "this friend Martin."

"I for one," he thinks that represents the intelligence of the Ontario workman he's mistaken," said Mr. Hepburn. "They don't want to

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Putting the atmosphere to work! Everybody knows how the atmosphere works in case of the wind making windmills revolve and pushing ships across the seas. But, perhaps few think of the quiescent air actually doing work. It does work by virtue of its weight. Our ordinary lift or suction pumps have been used for centuries to raise water from cisterns to the surface. But such pumps can not lift water higher than 34 feet and in practice seldom higher than 30. When the pump handle is worked the valves are so arranged that the air pressure inside the pump cylinder is reduced. The air pressure on the water outside can then force the water upwards. Other devices are vacuum sweepers and cups to lift plate glass, paper; and there are many others.

Police Who Investigate Warn Her of Consequence

FAVORITE MASQUERADE

"Can you come right away, there is a man outside behaving in a disgusting either drunk or crazy", the voice said over the telephone to the police station shortly after eleven o'clock last night.

A few seconds later the police car containing Constables Evans and Taylor drew up in front of the Canniffon Road, where a party was in progress.

Investigation by the police officers revealed the fact that the "man" was a woman apparelled in male attire. Asked for an explanation the woman replied that she did this quite often. Every Hallowe'en night I masquerade as a man and nobody is the wiser," she added. Watch for me next Hallowe'en, you will meet me for I would have a bottle in my pocket," she told the officers.

Tonight, why I just did it for fun. I could see there was a party going on and I thought I would dress up."

A stern warning was issued by the officers to the effect that a repetition of the Hallowe'en activities might result in serious consequences.

'IT WILL TAKE GOOD AMERICAN TO DEFEAT ME'

So Says George Wilson, "Soap Box Champion" at Capitol Theatre

"RACE FOR CANADA"

"I am going to race for Canada, and it will take a good American to beat me," declared twenty-year-old George Wilson, Canadian Soap Box champion to a crowded auditorium at the Capitol theatre last night where he was given a rousing reception prior to his leaving today for Akron, Ohio, where he will race in the International Soap Box Derby.

The youthful champion hesitantly walked to the centre of the stage after being formally introduced by President Norman Garbutt, of the Belleville Kinsmen's Club, sponsors of the youth. He answered a number of questions relative to his past victories and regarding the forthcoming race on Sunday. Wilson stated that should he win he will take advantage of the major prize offered, a four years scholarship in any university, and that he would go to school in Canada.

"Do you think you will win on Sunday," genial Norman Garbutt asked him.

"I don't know," he replied.

Not Frustered

"Will the local speaker bother you when it is announced that you are the Canadian champion?"

"Not a bit."

"What are you going to do in the race on Sunday?"

"I am going to race for Canada and it will take a good American to beat me," came the startling reply. The audience broke into prolonged applause at this sally.

Mrs. George E. Wilson, mother of the youth was invited to the stage and spoke of the excitement in the Wilson household during the past few days. She will accompany her son to Akron.

"Do you think you can persuade Kinsmen's Club Derby next year," she was asked.

"I think it will be no need for persuasion," Mrs. Wilson smiled. "You can consider that entered right now."

Mother is Proud

"I suppose you were the proudest mother in Canada on Tuesday night," President Garbutt said.

"I certainly was." Mrs. Wilson replied.

"I don't blame you. I would be," the chairman of the meeting, while the audience roared its approval.

Previous to the appearance of the youthful champion, Taylor Mason, genial local master of ceremonies gave a brief outline of the activities of the Kinsmen's Club in Belleville and of the Soap Box Derby held in Eastern Canada. A splendid tribute was paid to Kinsmen Cleo Reid and Norman Garbutt, who were instrumental of the local derbies, through whose untiring efforts the thrilling sporting events have reached the high stage they now occupy.

Trophy is Presented

The trophies won by the dominion title champion in the Soap Box derby held in Toronto were displayed on the stage, and Norman Garbutt, on behalf of Kinsmen Club of the Belleville district, made presentation of the Canadian Championship was made by President Garbutt.

Motorist at Last Gets His Order

"Your license plates are not very clear," Police Constable Bert Evans told a motorist whose car was parked in the city last night.

"Not very clear?" replied Richer to that effect?" came the startling reply.

"Yes, but why?" asked the officer.

The motorist explained that he came from Hamilton and on speeding charges was fined. He neglected at the license office for a new set of plates to replace the badly faded ones.

They told me that I would have to get an order from a police official or a member of the Department of Highways to drive anywhere. "It seems that the office there is being swamped with requests for new markers because the colors of the old ones are fading rapidly."

The motorist will appear at the police station today for the required order.

Harold O. Girvin, familiar to Belleville residents through his interest in mining locations in this area, and chief chemist for Steel Company of Canada, died suddenly at his home in Hamilton early yesterday morning.

His death was attributed to heart seizure. Just one week ago today he accompanied Mr. W. G. Springer, Mr. J. O. Smith, local industrial commissioner and W. R. The trip had been made to the mines in the interest of the large Hamilton Company and upon its request of local men interested in development of the properties.

SOME DO DREAD FRIDAY THE 13TH OTHERS DEFY IT

Superstition "The Bunk" Says Business Man of Years

FOLKS QUESTIONED

Superstitious? If you are and in case you have not looked at the calendar, today is Friday the Thirteenth.

Today is the day that superstitious folk will not pass under a ladder, shy at black cats or cross in front of them, refrain from handling mirrors, throw salt over their left shoulder should they spill the family shaker, hesitate before they throw their hats on a bed, and in the case of theatrical people refrain from whistling in the dressing room.

Today according to legend the ghost of ill-luck prowls in search of unsuspecting prey. Today the hobgoblins of fate stalk in our midst heels if you are of a superstitious nature.

Superstitious, Eh?

If you notice people paying more than the usual care in crossing intersections; if you see them casting wary eyes at ladders, and shying away from black felines than you can be assured that they belong to the superstitious class.

But there is not such a large number of these folk in Belleville, at least if a hurried questioning of a dozen people on the street today is any criterion.

"It's the bunk" growled an elderly business man when a reporter asked him if he believed in the Friday the Thirteenth hoodoo.

"No, I don't believe in it," a pert young stenographer replied between chiks of the chewing gum in a refreshment shop". I was born on the thirteenth of the month, have fairly good looks, a good job and expect to be married shortly. What bad luck I have to contend with?

"What are you talking about?" a grizzled farmer asked. The tired faced scribe attempted to explain but the aged agriculturist walked away with a shrug of his shoulder.

Her Mother Superstitious

Another young lady explained that while she was not superstitious, her mother was and to please her mother she refused to leave the house until the dread day had passed.

In Norwich, in the province of the United States, the famous "Thirteen" Club holds its monthly meetings. Of particular interest is the one which gathers in Paris, France. Members of thirteen members whose birthdays fall on the thirteenth day of the month, the club meets on every Friday, which falls on the thirteenth. Here they go through the motions of thirteen mirrors are smashed with hammers. Thirteen salts are over the honored guests. Ladders are placed around the clubroom and the members parade beneath them. Hats are tossed on the beds and every conceivable thing is supposed to bring bad luck is gone through. Thirteen cigarettes, one cigarette, taking the third light during the course of the evening. This immortal club has a black cat lock omen and obtained its origin from the old Norse myth.

All of which may tend to fend off the ghosts of ill-luck. This reporter was born on the thirteenth of the month and on his way to the office picked up a five cent piece. But of course the day is not over yet.

WOMAN STRUCK CROSSING STREET

Mrs. Effie Cosgrove Reported to Have Two Ribs Fractured

Mrs. Effie Cosgrove, 22 Nabel Street, sustained severe injuries yesterday afternoon when she was struck and knocked down by an automobile said to have been driven by Dr. G. D. Hall, Front Street, while attempting to cross at the intersection of Bridge and Coleman Streets. An X-ray examination ordered by Dr. Hall, however, who attended the injured woman revealed a fracture of two ribs on the left side.

According to a statement released by Chief Arthur Harman, who investigated the accident, Mrs. Cosgrove was crossing West Bridge Street from north to south and had arrived within ten feet of the opposite side when she became confused in the traffic and stepped directly in front of the driver car proceeding on West Bridge Street. The right front fender of the car struck the woman, knocking her to the ground. It was raining hard at the time and the pavements were slippery.

Dr. Tilley and passengers, brothers Conrad and Jerome of the Alfred Industrial School, were also proceeding to Toronto but will return today to file a report of the accident.

HEALTHY, HAPPY BY HARD WORK

Recipe For Long Life Given By F. J. Bird, Who is 90 on Saturday

Messages of felicitation and best wishes from his many friends will be August 14th by Mr. Francis John Bird, one of the county's oldest and best known men who will on that date observe the 90th anniversary of his birth in the section in which he has since resided.

Of sturdy pioneer stock, Mr. Bird who nearing the century mark is still hale and hearty, noted for his wit, and even yet his active mode of life, was a son of William and Mary Bird, who emigrated from Ireland to Canada and finally settled in the rolling hills of Hungerford Township. It was in this township he was born and first learned his avocation of the soil, a profession he followed in Hungerford for several years, later taking up residence in the 8th Concession of Thurlow where he again found the soil and productive and climate healthy. He lived in that area in Sidney Township for a period of twenty-eight years after leaving Thurlow. At present he resides at the home of his son, Sydney, in Thurlow Township.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. D. Hyde of West Moira Street, this city, and Sydney, who will join with his many other relatives and friends in a quiet birthday party being arranged.

Nearing the century mark, the veteran county resident maintains a cheerful yet philosophical outlook on life, brightened with the shadow of humor and wit which he was noted. It was but one year ago when interviewed by the Daily Ontario Intelligencer during a brief moment between his toil of vulcanizing tires that he gave as his recipe for long and happy life.

"Hard work will keep any man healthy and happy," he declared.

Find Most Eaters Are Well-Behaved

Tourists patronizing local lunch rooms are on the whole hearty and well behaved eaters. But there are exceptions.

Today the owner of one popular cafe is still pondering the reason for a certain incident which apparently prevents patron who hurried in, hastily scanned the menu and gave the order for a bill.

"Bring the soup first," he requested. "And make it snappy—time fast."

The soup lay untouched while he waited. Served the remainder of the dinner he produced a large can, dumped the contents of the "order" within, poured the soup on top, paid his bill and left without comment.

100 Candles Burn on Cake At Roslin Church Centennial

Mrs. Wellington Fitchett, Oldest Active Member of W. M. S. Officiates at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Banquet—History of Congregation is Told.

Roslin, Aug. 13 (Special)— On Tuesday evening, Aug. 10th, the congregation of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church held their Centenary banquet in the dining hall of the church.

There was a large attendance and all did ample justice to the good things provided by the ladies.

At the conclusion of the banquet a large birthday cake decorated with one hundred candles was lit, and to Mrs. Wellington Fitchett the oldest active member of the Women's Missionary Society, the honor of blowing out the candles and cutting the cake was given. Later in the church, Rev. Mac-Donald reviewed briefly the events of the past century in connection with the congregation of St. Andrew's Church.

Settlement After Long Wars

Over one hundred years ago when through woods, swamps and jungles a number of sturdy Irish and Scotch settlers from across the water came to settle in this district. Like the Israelites of old for them at home.

The expression following the Napoleonic conflict inspired many to seek homes in the new world.

They came from the middle class and from the army. The disbanding of many of the volunteer regiments have settled Canada and there is a trace of such in the community of this county.

Coming from the old land these people missed the worship of the church. In families and in groups of three or four families came the desire for the founding of some settled means of grace.

Elders Appointed

In one group at least they met and appointed their elders, but such election was not sanctioned by Presbytery for another year. The elders as they were able, maintained the tradition of leadership even preaching on the Sabbath. The first services in the vicinity were centered about the Squire Campbell's place after his settlement.

The first attempt at organization was announced in 1827. Unfortunately little of the early history is gathered from communication since. However, very definite reference is made to the first annual financial meeting in the year and quite sure of the year of organization.

Since then there has been a line of ministers and students, which may not be given completely at this time as the records are very incomplete before 1850.

The Records

Dates unknown, Rev. MacNabb and Rev. James Nesbitt (students), 1850-1852 Rev. Thomas Hall, Rev. Gregg, 1856-1861 Rev. James Gray, 1861-1876 Rev. James Greig, 1876-1886 ?, 1890-1892 Rev. Donald Kelso. At this time the present brick church was built and pews were erected at a cost of $1,000.80. The original pulpit and choir chairs stands were given by Mr. Wm. Forgey, and communion was granted to demolish the old frame church which was located in the cemetery.

1892-1895 Rev. McCombe, 1895-1902 Rev. D. D. MacDonald. At this time coal oil lamps replaced the candles formerly used. 1902-1903 Rev. S. S. Bates. An organ was installed in the church. 1903-1906 Rev. J. A. Black, 1906-1909 Rev. Alex Rennie, 1909 the W.M.S. was started, and Mrs. W. Fitchett, then Miss Teasie Carruth was appointed secretary treasurer and Mrs. Fitchett has been a member continuously since that time. 1904-1911 Rev. McConnell. In 1908 the cement platform was placed in front of the church. June 4th 1911, vacant. Mr. Wm. Shillabeer led devotions. 1915-1918 Rev. H. S. Stares, Mr. Hedderington decorated the church. 1914, vacant. Mr. Shillabeer in charge. 1914 Rev. McLeod, 1919 Rev. Mitchell, 1918-1926 Rev. A. O. MacDonald, 1926 Rev. D. Mac Gillivray (supply). In 1926 Presbyry was united with Roslin and Fuller. In 1926 Coleman lights were installed replacing the coal oil lamps. 1926-1930 Rev. Mr. Duncan. 1930 Rev. Mr. Montgomery (died after six months), 1931 Rev. Harold Reid, 1933-1936 Rev. D. C. Hill, 1936 Rev. J. W. MacDonald.

Rev. MacDonald referred to the work of Mr. Wm. Moore who was superintendent of the Sunday School for over 30 years and others who have taken a prominent part in the work of the church.

Rev. Harold Reid, of Toronto, who was present, spoke of his pleasure at taking part in the observance of this one hundredth birthday occasion, regretting the fact that he had to remain in Toronto on Sunday, Mrs. Reid said Roslin would always have an important place in his heart, he received his starting of the beginning and growth of the congregation, regretting the fact that the congregation at present was not as large as in years past, but felt the community had been larger in former years. Rev. Reid told of visiting Florida last winter, staying in St. Augustine, and worshiping in a Presbyterian Church which had been erected as a memorial and which had cost one million dollars, but, said the speaker you cannot worship any better there than here, if you come in the right spirit, the spirit of humility and worship.

Rev. Reid felt there was a great opportunity for the congregation and expressed their prayers and trusted that they might go forward in the second century.

Rev. C. Bessey of the Anglican Church brought greetings and good wishes from the Anglican congregation.

Rev. MacDonald read a message from the Moderator of the Synod of Kingston and from Toronto. St. Lawrence regretting its inability to be represented at the present, at the celebrations as he is visiting in Scotland.

Greetings From Presbytery

Rev. Mr. MacMillan of Stirnbrae, offered greetings of the Presbytery of Kingston and expressed his pleasure at being present at this and previous occasions. He extended the good wishes of his own congregation and congratulated the congregation on their choice of a minister, Rev. Mr. Reid, and their richest blessing on their future efforts.

Greetings had been received and were read from the following members of the Presbytery—Rev. J. G. Cameron, D.D., of Deseronto; Rev. Mr. Cunningham, Tweed; Rev. Craig, Demoresville; Rev. W. A. Hunter, Madoc.

Greetings were also received from the following former ministers:—Rev. T. W. Gaetz, Toronto; Rev. John Moore, Strathroy; Rev. J. A. Black, Hornings' Mills; Rev. J. McIlmoyl, Chesley Ont.

Rev. McKinnon in his letter recalled an interesting item of his stay in Roslin; of many kindnesses experienced, and of the hearty support given to the congregation of exceptionally fine men and women. Of special reasons which influenced leaving Roslin were: First, ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Church on June 9th, 1886, and second found life partner. Wished to commend the congregation at this time to the world famous motto of Edward Everett Hale: "Look up, not down; forward not backward; out not in and lend a hand."

And above all the great word of our Lord, "Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

"We fight but 'tis He who nerves us arm;
His turns the arrows that else might harm,
And out of the storm He brings a calm,
And the work that we count so hard to do,
He makes it easy, for He works too."

A Message From England

Rev. J. A. McConnell of Stirling, Britton, Manitoba, writing from Canada House, London, England, expressed sincere regret that his visit in the Old Land prevented him from attending the Centenary celebrations of his first charge after being ordained to the ministry, but hoped to visit Roslin on his way home about the middle of August.

Rev. J. P. McLeod, Wgton, sent a letter of greeting and good wishes.

Mrs. (Rev.) A. D. McDonald of Fergus, who was present read a letter of greeting from Rev. McDonald.

Rev. Duncan of Kingston, again voiced his pleasure at being present at the Centennial celebrations. He felt co-operation in all undertakings, and reminded his hearers that God's part is never lacking if we do our part.

A letter of congratulations and good wishes was read from Rev. D. O. Hill and Mrs. Hill of Exeter, who have recently returned home after spending several weeks visiting this their former charge.

Rev. MacDonald expressed his thanks to all who had helped towards the success of the celebrations felt God had crowned all their work with success. The evening was brought to a close by singing the Doxology.

The offering on Sunday and the proceeds from the banquet amounted to about $150.00.

SILK MILL STRIKE CALLED

Acton Vale, Que., Aug. 13 (CP)—A general strike of 183 employes at the Acton Vale silk mill in this eastern township town was called today in a demand for a provincial collective labor contract.

Workers at the mill here are members of the National Catholic Syndicate which called a province-wide strike of nearly 10,000 Dominion Textile Company workers Aug. 12.

When Walking
you are Courteous—
Try Courtesy
When Driving

AS WE walk about on street, highway and byath we are all most constantly in each other's eyes, overtaking, stop, start and otherwise mingle with our fellow-pedestrians. None of us would think of being otherwiseive are just naturally courteous at heart.

But, too often, this native courtesy leaves us when we get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle.

Do not let your attitude of courtesy leave you when you drive but, rather, "Try Courtesy" every inch of the way.

When you meet a fellow-motorist pull well over to your right. When you overtake him, signal your intention and do it. Keep to the right on curves, "blind spots" and, of course, on hills. Drive at the speed of the traffic you are in—don't "hold up the parade." Never put the "other fellow" on "the spot". Use your head, be careful and you may look be hurt.

Dip or dim your lights when you meet at night—neither of you can see where to steer when you are "blinded".

Do not "crowd" pedestrians, we all walk at times and we all dislike being startled.

Hand-signal your intention to slow down, stop or turn and otherwise act to your fellow-man awheel in the same considerate manner as when he is afoot—"Try Courtesy" everyhach of the way.

FINSLER'S COMET CAME

If it were not for the astronomers the people generally would have known nothing of the coming and the going of Finsler's comet. For more nights than have been pleasant to endure the skies have been clouded and what might have been an experience has been unseen. Finsler's comet which ran across the handle of the Great Dipper did so when men and women and students of this part of the country could not see through the muggy clouds which kept out the light of stars. Last night the first time the sky was clear but the comet had passed out of the range of the unaided eye.

But Finsler's comet exists though it does not affect mortal fate. We must take the word of a scientist for it for they have photographed it and newspapers have published exposures of the visitor from the far reaches of space.

DASTARDLY DEED

Striking from a hidden place some sinister-minded person set out poison for the pigeons which frequented the small park on Broadway, New York, near the Verdi statue this week. Pigeons began to fall from the sky as the potent poison overcame them suddenly in their flight or as they sat on ledges of buildings and in all seventy, enough to fill two large baskets hurtled from the air and were picked up dead or dying.

The slaughter did not last long but it struck swiftly like a dagger. The unknowing birds have been accustomed to feed on morsels of food or stab the surface of the pool with their beaks for food. They had never gone hungry and had no reason to suspect an enemy.

But it came in the form of strychnine much like an ordinary exterminator. The pellets resembled bird seed.

One habitual feeder of the birds was afterwards afraid to go near the fence to feed the survivors on the fatal day.

One man in the afternoon fed with rice the fifty birds which remain and kept repeating "Who would want to do a thing like that" as he lamented the fate of the birds. "Terrible, terrible" an old woman muttered.

Most persons will agree with them that the act had no defence.

MAN THE SLOWER

Women's minds change more quickly than men's, says Dr. Robert Millsen, director of a speech clinic at Indiana University. Their minds are more easy to turn than men's for they are made that way. This fact he says explains why men are more often stammerers. This stuttering is only one of man's comarative difficiencies, the doctor said, for man may be more often color-blind, he is a slower reader than a woman, he is a poorer speller and lacks mental alertness in short. New York Times says in a lighter mood on this natural phenomen,— "That's what happens when both sides of the brain attempt to assert themselves. In the woman's brain, so we knew all along, one side is more likely to echo the other. And re-echo, too. The male stutterer will take what comfort he can from the fact that his cerebral organ is a sort of self-contained democracy; it argues within itself, listens to the other side. The feminine brain, on the contrary is a natural absolutism. It agrees with itself, doesn't give a look-in to the opposition. Or does it save all its energy for arguing with others?

"Anyway, we are glad to know that the Arkansas stutterers hold an annual convention. It is somehow comforting to learn that there are more than a million persons in the United States who have to think before they speak. We didn't realize there were so many people who abstain from making speeches. It serves to dispel the prevalent notion that the entire 125,000,000 of us never pause to reflect, never hesitate before we express ourselves, pass snap judgments on everything. It is pleasant to contemplate a meeting of the slow of speech."

FASTEST OF LENSES

Believed by its makers to be the fastest in the world, a new photographic lens has just completed taking pictures of light rays which left distant stars before dinosaurs trod the earth.

The Bausch and Lomb Optical Company of Rochester have announced the completion of tests of the new lens by Dr. M. L. Humason at the Mount Wilson Observatory. In conjunction with the 100-inch reflector at Mount Wilson, the largest existing telescope, the new lens has photographed spectra of nebulae 30,000 times fainter than the faintest star visible to the unaided eye.

Recent data has put these nebulae at an estimated distance of 30,000,000 light years from the earth, Dr. Humason said.

So little light reaches the film from the nebulae that an exposure of 60 hours was necessary to make the tiny streak on the developed plate. Dr. Humason said that before the lens was developed, an exposure then some of the nebulae could not be ure twice as long was necessary and even photographed.

Dr. Humason said the work was being done to verify the theory of William de Sitter, a Dutch astronomer, that the universe was expanding and that the receseive velocity of nebulae was proportional to their distance.

SPINSTER

For days and days, and months and months,
And years and years and years,
I've walked down Main street at half past eight,
And up the hill to the red brick school house,
Where I teach grade nine mathematics
To a lot of care-free, rollicking boys.
If it hadn't been for the Great War (to end war).
And if Roderick Jackson hadn't gone to war (to end war),
I might have been at home this morning,
In a white bungalow with a green roof and lawn
And daffodils bobbing beside the walk,
Writing a note to the teacher
To ask why she didn't pull Rodd up in his mathematics
And give him more attention
And "see that he doesn't fail again this year"...
If...and if...
Wars to end war are hatched in hell!
For war ends everything — everything worth while—but war!—
Industrial war, social war, provincial war, international war,
War brewed this seething, internecine war in all mankind,
Never-ceasing, devastating war in my heart!—
Oh, Roderick!...

MOVE ON IS THE ORDER OF THE DAY FOR TRANSIENTS WHO VENTURE WITHIN the city limits of Belleville. Human flotsam and jetsam, treated like lepers, must in effect cry "Unclean, Unclean," and pass on to other more hospitable communities. Some communities are social enough to regard even the transients as human and extend compassion in the form of free meals and a place to sleep. Belleville did this for a while and even furnished a bath and clean place to sleep, but wearied of well-doing and the place where transients could get a meal for a ten-cent ticket provided by citizens who preferred that way of doing to bringing the transients into their homes, was closed. Now transients scatter all over the residential section seeking food and several citizens of Belleville give out tickets for meals on restaurants, while the proprietor of at least one hotel feeds many of the travelling unfortunate. Many thoughtful people think that this transient problem is not receiving the consideration it should, locally or nationally. Many young men make up the bulk of the transient army. If every community makes them move on and they find themselves outcasts unwanted, what will be the effect upon their characters and dispositions? Will it not make them thoroughly criminal, desperate and dangerous. Citizens who feel it their duty to feed the hungry, without asking for a genealogical chart, would prefer that the community looked this question squarely in the face and enquire whether it wouldn't be better to make some united effort, rather than just shuffling off all responsibility with a "Move On" order.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was trying to make his clear lighter work, and ma said, Wiltyun I wonder if you can help me out on a little bridge problem, I mean n case your partner makes an inexcusable error that there is simply no excuse for, she said, and pop said, Do you mean an unpardonable blunder for which there is no forgivenss?

Yes, exactly, Pa said. What can you say to such a person to relieve your own tension and still stay within the practical bounds of ethical bridge? she said, and pop said, I suppose you mean for instanta, if your partner puts her best trump on your best ace, how can you intimate to her your awareness of the situation without going so far as to upset her concentration and yet at the same time make her feel like the worm that she is.

Well ma, in a nutshell, ma said, and pop said, That's an occasion for diplomacy, in fact I believe it's one of the tests that have to be passed by aspirants for the consular service. There are 2 distinct schools of thought on the point, known as the A and B schools. The A school holds that it is sufficient merely to look at the offender with a menacing leer, but according to the B school it is necessary to lock actual daggers and at the same time thunder the word with a distinct wagging of the fingers, he said.

O my, then I properly did the right thing at the bridge club today, ma said. I mean I proceeded to use the actual use of words and practically meaningless compared to my actual thoughts, but I said, Well, Mrs. Tarberry, I said, would you kindly tellme me where you've been all these years that people have been playing bridge? I said to her, and still strangely enough I dont seem to have any regret, ma said, she said. It's a woman's world. I excuse me while I retire from it.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE CAPITOL

Dick Foran in "Empty Holsters"

"Empty Holsters", a rip-roaring Western movie dealing with outlaws and gun-fights, has been scheduled to open at the Capitol Theatre, Saturday only, with big, red-headed Dick Foran, the Singing Cowboy, as his husky and melodious hero.

It is a tale of the West in its lawless days when "might was right" what they could get by whatever means they found at hand. Then, if they could, they blamed their thefts upon others.

That's what happens to Foran, as Clay Brent, a cowboy. The boss of the town, one Ace Cain, is a road agent, and after bolding up a stage-coach and stealing its gold cargo, manages to place the guilt upon Dick and send him on perjured testimony to jail.

During two years of imprisonment he builds up an iron determination to prove his innocence and bring the malicious Ace Cain to justice. He is then paroled and gets a chance to carry out his revenge. With the aid of a faithful pal, played by Glen Strange, he gets evidence against Ace.

The latter learns of this, and hires a killer to put Dick out of the way. But Dick's horse, "Smoky", settles the would-be killer by interfering with a nest piece of horse sense.

After several thrilling adventures Dick clears his name and aids the authorities in bringing to justice the highwayman Ace Cain and his gang.

An additional point of interest in "Empty Holsters" is that its leading lady, who makes her first screen appearance, She is Patricia Walthall, daughter of the famous Henry B. ("Little Colonel") Walthall, who stirred the dramatic world years ago by his performance in that role in "Birth of a Nation". He died only a few months ago, still in harness.

ARTILLERY DUELS OPEN HOSTILITIES NEAR SHANGHAI

Countless Area in Thickly Populated Centres Result of Shelling

FIRING HEARD

(By Morris J. Morris)

Shanghai, Aug. 13.—(AP)—An artillery duel between Chinese and Japanese batteries in the vicinity of Kiangwan, a few miles north of this city of 3,500,000 people, indicated today that major hostilities had broken out.

Huge clouds of smoke pouned skyward from the thickly populated villages in the northern suburbs as though countless fires had been started by the shelling.

It was not known whether all foreign residents of the area, caught by the rapid concentration of the Chinese troops, had been evacuated from the battle zone.

The Kiangwan area was cut off to all but military traffic, which was directed from the city to the north. The sound of firing was loud in Shanghai.

U. S. Fleet in Action

The United States Asiatic fleet was ordered into action to protect Americans as Japanese marines clashed with the vanguard of an advancing Chinese army on the edge of the International Settlement.

The Nanking Government moved in no uncertain terms to protect the capital from attack by the Japanese fleet anchored in the lower Yangtze and Wangpoo Rivers. It closed the Yangtze to navigation below Chinkiang, 100 miles up river from Shanghai. Nanking is 40 miles farther up the river.

The great stream was blockaded 100 miles above the Wooseng Forts and mines. The huge Japanese guns of the forts in that area were stripped for action.

Firing Quickly Spreads

Hostilities broke out in midmorning in the northeastern quarter of the Settlement near Hongkew Park, where the Japanese Landing party, reinforced to some 7,000 marines, has established its headquarters.

The firing quickly spread to the Chapei Chinese section to the west where some of the heaviest fighting of the last year between China and Japan occurred. The intermittent firing seemed to be heaviest in the Hongkew district sectors.

Japanese sentries were heavily reinforced and the streets of the area were swarming with Japanese marines with fixed bayonets.

The whole situation seemingly was growing more intense by the hour despite an apparent effort by both sides to exercise restraint and keep the undeclared war from developing into widespread hostilities in this great city.

The commander of the Japanese force, which were landed from the cruiser Idzumo in the Whangpoo River charged the Chinese had precipitated the conflict by opening fire with a machine-gun on his marines, who were constructing a barricade.

The Japanese returned the fire, silencing the long machine-gun that started the attack. Chinese snipers, however, took up positions on roof tops and behind shutters in neighboring houses and began to pepper the Japanese work-detachments.

House to House Search

The Japanese Commander ordered out patrols and a house-to-house search was started to drive out the Chinese Blue Shirts. Desultory fighting was continuing with the Chinese using rifles and machine-guns.

Within the Chapei sector the Japanese claimed they had clashed with the vanguard of the Central Government troops which have been pouring into the area since yesterday. Fighting was said to be heaviest in the vicinity of the Japanese Cemetery which the Marines were attempting to guard.

The Chinese Mayor of Greater Shanghai, O. K. Yui, charged Japanese marines had suddenly rushed the Chinese lines in Chapei in violation of the pledge given the consular body by the Japanese consul-general yesterday that the Japanese would not open hostilities. Yui declared the Chinese troops were putting up a determined resistance.

All Stores Closed

The Japanese were reported to be holding back waiting the arrival of reinforcements from Tokyo as understood to have ordered sent from the island Empire. The Chinese, on the other hand, were said to want to force the issue before the Japanese reinforcements is strengthened.

Japanese sources reported that General Chiang Kai-Shek, Chinese Premier and Army Commander, had ordered 70 crack 87th and 88th Divisions to take up positions in the Kiangwan sector, just to the mouth of the Whangpoo River.

Foreign residents of the great oriental city of 3,500,000 persons were barricaded within the International Settlement where British, United States and other troops patrolled the borders.

Northern Shanghai was virtually a no-man's land with Japanese and Chinese troops facing each other across the empty streets. The civilian population had disappeared and all stores were closed and barred.

LORD RUNCIMAN'S LIFE SEA SAGA

'Grand Old Man of Shipping' Dies at Age of 90 Years

Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, Aug. 13 (CP)—Lord Runciman, 90, the "grand old man of shipping" whose career was a saga of the seas, died here today.

He passed by one night his wish to finish his life afloat. He had been convalescing aboard his yacht Dona Isam II at Blyth for many weeks and apparently was improving. Wednesday night he became restless and yesterday was removed to his home here.

In April he suffered a serious relapse at this country seat on the Northumberland coast on the day his great age he regained strength and on Coronation Day heard the broadcast of the proceedings. A few days later he was removed to the hospital where his 90th birthday was celebrated at a family party.

Career Began at Twelve

Lord Runciman's adventurous career began at the age of twelve when he smuggled away from home during the night, swam a small river, and ran off to the seaport where he got a cabin boy. His ship took him to the southern seas.

Prior to becoming the foremost figure in the shipping industry he experienced much in the humanity of sailing ships".

"It was on the floor of the forecastle that first I began to plod away into the mysteries of navigation," Lord Runciman once said. "Ultimately I learned sufficient to enable me to secure a place on the quarter-deck."

He took his mate's certificate at twenty and was given his first command at twenty-four. He married at twenty-one and was the father of an only son—Walter Runciman, who was created a Viscount on his retirement ten weeks ago after serving in the cabinet for many years.

After a quarter-century at sea, he invested his savings in a small steamship and founded the Moor Line. His interests later embraced some of the leading lines afloat.

His First Air Journey.

At the age of 84 he took his first air journey—it is recalled here by his grandson, Leslie Runciman.

"Entranced by the weather on sighting. "But I like my yacht better."

He was head of the firm of Walter Runciman and Company Limited of Newcastle-upon-Tyne as a London, chairman of the Moor Line of cargo steamers, chairman of the Tyne Steam Line, and director of many shipping organizations.

Author of Sea Books.

He was the author of a number of sea books and wrote also his biographical writing with "the tragedy of St. Helena" and "Drake, Nelson, and Napoleon."

In 1910 he was president of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom.

A few years ago a thief attempted to rob him of his watch.

"I gave him a right uppercut to the jaw, a useful blow I learned at sea," the doughty per remarked.

He was outspoken against big ships and blue ribands. Referring to the decision to build a sistership for the Queen Mary, he declared: "We have the Queen Mary and we are going to have another. Only one can come from these ideas. We do not want the Queen Mary's. All of the Queen Mary were divided into three the owners would have fifty times more profit. Blue Riband competition is no good to anyone, it wastes capital and breeds unemployment."

Edith Wharton, Dies, Famous U. S. Novelist

Paris, Aug. 13— Edith Wharton, American novelist who satirized the "four hundred" society into which she was born, died Wednesday at her Eighteenth Century villa, the Pavillon Colombe, at Saint Brice-sous-Foret, near Paris.

The 75-year-old author of "Ethan Frome", "The Mount of Mirth", and "The Age of Innocence", died of a heart attack which followed six weeks of critical illness.

Born in New York on Jan 24, 1862, of aristocratic ancestory, she was known in childhood as "that awful Jussy Jones, always scribbling." At 23, Edith Newbold Jones's marriage to Edward Wharton, Boston banker, was a social event. She began her serious writing four years later with a novel, "Happiness", published in Scribner's Magazine.

Here Is How Largest Navies Compare According to Available Figures

Great Britain's might on the high seas is still unchallenged by world powers with a steadily increasing the size of their navies, according to the latest available figures. Britain has, including present tonnage and that under construction, 300,000 tons of fighting craft more than classes England has more ships than any other nation. In the above table are included some craft which are considered "over age." Fascist countries such as Italy and Germany are at the bottom of the list with regard to fighting ships. One notable fact is that Italy has no aircraft carriers at present or under construction.

35 FOOT MONSTER IS BROUGHT ASHORE

Fortune Harbor, Nfld., Aug. 13.—(CP Cable)—This little Notre Dame Bay fishing village has a seaserpent all its own—and had the carcass to prove it.
